Introduction

THE following pages contain the eventful chronicles of a Highland Clan, not one of the most numerous or most powerful, but remarkable as occupying a distinct place in the history of Scotland. The narrative may doubtless be considered a record of crime, sometimes tragical, sometimes trivial, yet a careful study of the Race, of the circumstances and of the times, must forcibly bring out many claims for a lenient judgment. Early and native inhabitants of the country, with pride of ancestry and an indomitable spirit, the MacGregors in the fourteenth century found themselves dispossessed of the lands whereon they dwelt, by reason of Charters, instruments inexplicable to them, bestowed upon others. From that time a sense of wrong and of injustice pervaded their minds. Yet they might possibly have been content to maintain themselves on lands held by heritable tacks from the landlords in possession, but for two causes. First, the natural increase in the numbers of the Clan, hemmed up in glens and straths where the means of subsistence were necessarily limited. Secondly, the enmity of certain neighbours determined to dispossess them. In other countries the turmoils of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries were equally violent, but the art of war on a larger scale afforded an outlet to the belligerent qualities of their inhabitants, and tended also to decrease the population. The MacGregors without any other channel for their energy, cramped in the means of livelihood, totally ignorant, and goaded by those anxious to profit by their fall, lived by forays and raids. Many other Highland Clans and many Lowlanders did the same, but most of them had more power to make their struggles against each other effective in forcing support from the Government, whereas the ClanGregor, through the wiles of their adversaries, became the object of the strongest persecution and the most severe penal enactments. Had the opportunity occurred, the MacGregors, as was proved later, would have fought for their Sovereign with devoted loyalty, but they could not easily understand that their personal enemies, through misrepresentations, had become armed with the King's authority. The conflict of Glenfruin, in which the Clan Gregor gained a victory, eventually fatal to themselves, against vastly superior numbers, was punished by numerous executions: the Name was proscribed, the men were hunted down with bloodhounds, the women branded on the cheek with a red-hot iron, and yet the Clan clung to the only virtues they knew, courage, endurance and fidelity. Their unquenchable spirit was never broken, and when the time of persecution was over, they revived and brought their noble qualities to a better use. The British Army has numbered many heroes from this lion-hearted race.

The article on MacGregor in Sir Robert Douglas's "Baronage," published in 1798, was probably the first accessible history of the Clan, with the exception of the short notice in Buchanan of Auchmar's "History of Scottish Surnames," first published in 1723. Douglas's "Memoir of the MacGregors and the MacAlpins" was written by the late Sir John MacGregor Murray, Bart., before he went to India in January 1770.¹ He is styled by the editor "An ingenious gentleman who hath been at great pains in collecting the materials, and with much care and accuracy hath ranged the vouchers and put them into their proper order." This tribute was well merited, and Sir John's accuracy both in public and private life was afterwards well known; but modern researches, and facilities of access to public records, have thrown a different light on some parts of the narrative, whilst on the other hand many circumstances familiar to the writer of the account one hundred and twenty-five years ago have now slipped beyond recall.

In the year 1822 the Rev. William MacGregor Stirling, at that time minister of the Port of Monteith, undertook the compilation of a history of the Clan Gregor, for the late Sir Evan Murray MacGregor, who himself revised the MSS. till he went to the West Indies as Governor of the Leeward Islands in 1832. The work, which had the able assistance and co-operation of the late Mr Donald Gregory, was not finished or in a form ready for publication at the time of Mr MacGregor Stirling's death in 1833, but a great portion of it has been of infinite service to the present compilation. Mr MacGregor Stirling had collected an elaborate series of Excerpts from the Register of the Privy Council of Scotland, and other Records which were afterwards enlarged, carried forward and critically analysed by Mr Gregory, and which embodied every known authentic passage regarding the Clan. These were comprised in three large folio volumes entitled "The Chartulary¹ of the ClanGregor." It was understood that this valuable collection was made with the view of assisting the history of the Clan, which Sir Evan wished to have published at his expense, and several letters from Mr Gregory to Sir Evan allude to the intended publication, but the death of Mr Gregory in 1836, and of Sir Evan in 1841, put a stop to the work.

On the death of Mr Gregory the Iona Club, which had been founded by him in conjunction with Mr W. F. Skene in 1833, "to investigate and illustrate the History, Antiquities and early literature of the Highlands," made an arrangement with his executors by which the Club acquired his collections, and amongst them the three volumes of the so-called Chartulary, together with three companion volumes of pedigrees. When the Iona Club was dissolved Mr Skene deposited these collections in the Library of the Antiquarian Society, with the stipulation that any papers claimed by the families to whom they related were to be restored.² Circumstances delayed the following up of a claim which seems to have been made nearly fifty years ago, but through the courtesy of the President and Council of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, with the consent and advice of the late Mr Skene, the six MS. books relating to the ClanGregor were in March 1890 handed over to Sir Malcolm MacGregor of MacGregor, as representative of his great grandfather Sir Evan, on whose daughter the privilege of giving to the Clan the results of former zealous Clansmen's labours now devolves.

In addition to these most important collections, and the materials which are to be found in the Dean of Lismore's MS., the "Black Book of Taymouth," and the published "Records of the Privy Council," (the first two volumes edited by Dr Hill Burton, and the subsequent volumes by Dr Masson), etc., etc., the papers of many of the Clan have been placed in the hands of the compiler. The admirably preserved traditions of the Rannoch MacGregors, and their different branches, have been supplied by Mr Alexander MacGregor, Crosshill, Glasgow, now in America, to whom thanks for most valuable assistance are due ; also to Mr Gregor MacGregor, S.S.C., Edinburgh, for much kind aid, including the revision of the Gaelic portions of the work ; to Dr W. D. Cameron and others, whose information will be acknowledged in the course of the work.

One of the objects of the ClanGregor Society, instituted in 1822, is—"To publish ancient or interesting documents or articles on interesting events connected with, and to compile an authentic history of, the Clan and of the different families belonging to it." In furtherance of this object, the present work has been undertaken at the request of the Society, and with the hope that the facts and traditions here collected will prove of interest to the whole ClanGregor.

Chapter I

Early Origin

THE renowned ancestor to whom we look as the Founder of our Race was King Gregory, who reigned from 878 to 890. No documentary evidence can be adduced to prove descent from a source so remote; and allusion to it is not made here as to an established historical fact, but because the tradition has been constantly handed down that Gregory, of the race of Scotland's early kings, was the ancestor of the Clan which bears his name.¹

Modern authorities on early Scottish History state that Ciricius, or Girig, or Girg, afterwards known as Gregory, whatever may have been his connection with Alpin's Royal line, was not King Alpin's son. According to the most trustworthy chronicles, his father was Dungaile, or Dungaillus, grandfather of Run, King of the Britons of Strathclyde, who married the daughter of Kenneth M^cAlpin. After the death of Aedh, or Heth, the last of Kenneth's sons, Eocha, son of Run, was placed on the throne of the Picts, and another king, Girig, was associated with him as his Governor. It is recorded that he liberated the Scottish Church from various secular exactions, in gratitude for which good offices the later chronicles, connected with the Religious Houses, afterwards revered him as Gregory the Great, a Ruler of remarkable wisdom, as well as a successful Commander.²

² Taken from "Celtic Scotland," first edition, vol. i. p. 329, 330. Mention is there made also of a "Church in the Mearns" with the name of "Eglisgirg," which still preserves a memorial of Girig.

It may be frankly confessed that, where even the most prominent historical characters are involved in considerable uncertainty, it must be impossible to trace the lineage of the Clan through the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth centuries with any certainty. Such an attempt was indeed made in a "Latin History of the Alpinian Family, formerly in the Scots College at Paris, and recovered from it by David Mallet" the Poet, who died in 1765. It is exceedingly unlikely that the date of this history, now undiscoverable, can have been earlier than the seventeenth century, before which time, the History by Hector Boece (1570) had given rise to much spurious tradition; but it is probable that there may have been threads of truth woven into the more elaborate narrative. It may be interesting to give a list of the generations, as enumerated in the article on MacGregor, in Sir Robert Douglas's "Baronage," based, in the early part, on this Latin document, of which Sir John MacGregor Murray possessed an authentic copy, although no trace of either the original or the copy can now be found.¹

Two very old MacGregor pedigrees have been brought to light since Douglas's "Baronage" was written; one occurs in an ancient Gaelic parchment MS., dated 1467,² which contains genealogies of most of the Highland Clans. In this document, the Clan Gregor is deduced from Fearchar Fada, King of Dalriada, of the Lorne line, who reigned in the early part of the eighth century, through a certain Anrias connected with the Earldom of Ross. This pedigree has been printed in full in the "Collectanea de Rebus Albanicis," and again in "Celtic Scotland," vol. iii. From these works it is here transcribed in Gaelic and in English.

"Genelach Clann Grigair. Maelcolaim ic Padruic M^cEoin ic Grigair ic Donch M^cMaolcolaim ic Gillacrist M^cFearchar ic Muiredaig ic Ainreas M^cCormac ic Oirbertaig ic Fearchair M^cFearchair fada ic Fearadaig fin :—

² Discovered by Dr Skene among the MSS. in the Collection of the Faculty of Advocates, and considered to have been written by a M^cLachlan, 1450. (See Skene's "Highlanders," vol. ii. p. 8.) Reference is made to the MS. having been printed in the "Collectanea de Rebus Albanicis," edited by the Iona Club, first number. The genealogies from this MS. are also to be found in "Celtic Scotland," vol. iii., Appendix, p. 487.

[A King of Dalriada of the line of Lorn, early part of eighth century.]

Dr Skene holds that, previous to the eleventh century, this document is of no authority. His own theory is that, "previous to the thirteenth century, the Highlanders of Scotland were divided into a few great tribes, which exactly corresponded with the ancient earldoms, and that, from one or other of these tribes, all the Highlanders are descended" ("Highlanders of Scotland," vol. ii.).

The other ancient pedigree is to be found in a MS. Latin Chronicle, chiefly an obituary,¹ composed by Sir James MacGregor, Dean of Lismore,² in the sixteenth century, and containing a genealogy of John MacGregor of Glenstray, dated 1512. With regard to this list of ancestors (to be given later in detail), Dr Skene remarks:—

"Besides the genealogy of this Clan contained in the Irish MS., Dean MacGregor furnishes us with one which may probably be viewed as the native tradition. In it Gregor, the eponymus of the Clan, has a different ancestry, and his pedigree is taken up to a certain Aoidh Urchaidh, or Hugh of Glenurchay, which, as Glenurchay was an old possession of the MacGregors, may be viewed as the native tradition and more probable descent. The usual calculation would place him in the end of the twelfth century, but the Dean connects him at once with Kenneth M^cAlpin in the ninth century,¹ and thus the supposed royal descent of the MacGregors must be relegated to the same category with the descent of the other Clans from the Kings of Dalriada."²

"To the great tribe of the Moravians, or 'Men of Moray,' belong, in the main, the clans brought in the old Irish genealogies from the Kings of Dalriada of the tribe of Lorn, among whom the old Mormaers of Moray appear. . . . The group containing the M^cNabs, ClanGregor, and M^cKinnons, appear to have emerged from Glendochart, at least to be connected with the old Columban monasteries. The Clans, properly so called, were thus of native origin; the surnames partly of native and partly of foreign descent."³

It would seem unavailing to discuss at further length the question of the origin of the clan, always reckoned in the past as the "Siol Alpin"—the old motto, "S RIOGHAIL MO DHREAM," "My tribe is royal," will suffice as a memorial of our traditions. We may now pass on to a period when the family history begins to be more distinct.⁴

At the outset it may be desirable to recall circumstances which, although well known, require to be borne in mind, rightly to comprehend the subsequent position of the ClanGregor, their difficulties and struggles.

Amongst the continental nations there arose, in the early Christian centuries, the institution of feudalism. To protect themselves against hostile armies of foreigners, or against assaults by enemies of their own nation, the principal men turned their houses into fortified castles, and agreed with the peasants to protect them and their families on condition of their surrendering themselves entirely to their liege lord or suzerain. The sovereign gave land to his nobles on condition of military service to himself, with a certain number of their men; the nobles adopted some of their less powerful neighbours, and gave off portions of land to them on similar conditions, thus establishing a system of mutual advantage

² Celtic Scotland, first edition, vol. iii. p. 362, 363.

⁴ The hereditary belief in royal ancestry, and in an inheritance of the highest courage and truth, is shown in the poems from the Dean of Lismore's book, quoted chapter vii.

between the lord who granted protection, the vassals who gave their military service in return, and lastly the peasants who received protection and entirely gave up their freedom to obtain it.

Amidst the pressing necessities of the age which gave rise to it, the institution undoubtedly had its value, till the nations outgrew it. The feudal laws were brought to England by the Saxons about A.D. 600, and were made more stringent under the Norman William the Conqueror, in 1068. The system was introduced into Scotland by Malcolm II. in 1008, but it took a long time before it could absorb the tribal organisation then prevalent. Certain burdens on land proper to the old Celtic tenures gradually became assimilated to feudal forms in the eastern districts, whilst in the northern and western the great tribes broke up into clans about the thirteenth century.¹

The Clan, a Gaelic word meaning children, consisted originally of the children of a common ancestor, bound together by the ties of blood, loyal to the Chief of their race, and sharing his good or bad fortune. Personal attachment united each to the other in this family system, which in different degrees has subsisted in most primitive nations, such as the Israelites, and even in the present day amongst the Arabs. In the Highlands the chiefship was generally hereditary and belonged to the representative of the main stem, but to this there were frequent exceptions. The next cadet often became the captain, and transmitted that honour to his descendants. Occasionally in cases where the actual chief was prevented from taking an active part in warfare, the clan chose a leader on elective principles. The chieftains or heads of the different houses which had branched off from the main stem were also powerful, and exerted great influence over the chiefs; moreover, every clansman had his birthright of kindred blood, which gave him dignity and enthusiasm, so that it is incorrect in any way to liken members of a clan to the serfs of the feudal system. Doubtless there must have been cases of abuse and hardship, and the two systems running parallel, where they did not clash, sometimes overlapped. The feudal superiors, in some circumstances, won the affections of the occupants of their lands, and were accepted in the same position as chiefs of race; but this was the exception.

The struggle between the Gaelic population of the Highlands clinging to the old clan system on the one side, and the feudal overlords, who, having obtained crown charters of the lands, occupied by the native races, sought to dispossess them, was a long source of trouble and dispeace, and the MacGregors, especially, were for centuries irreconcilable to the change.

It may be observed that neither at the period under present consideration, nor for some time later, does the name of MacGregor, so passionately loved and so powerful a talisman in the future, appear to have existed as a surname, although individuals¹ of the race can be traced. There must early have been numerous descendants of the same ancestor, allied in blood and interests, for by the fifteenth century they had become a very large clan. The custom of distinguishing different families of the same clan by their patronymics—i.e., as the son of so-and-so—also of giving a “byname,” or “to-name,” to individuals, prevailed amongst Highlanders in very early days, and continued long after surnames became general in other places.

The following is taken from a sympathetic article on the Clan Gregor, published by Dr Joseph Anderson in 1890:—²

“There are some minor episodes in Scottish history that illustrate with singular force the native intensity of character and fervour of attachment to traditional systems, which so often made the nation’s progress towards the universal reign of law a bloodstained path. The case of the Clan Gregor is perhaps the most typical of these episodes, which marked the transition from the old Celtic system of the military organisation of the clans under the chiefs of their name to the territorial system, by which the men of the tribes became the men of their feudal landlords. But though its tragic and romantic elements have often been dealt with, the true story of the doings and sufferings of the devoted clan has yet to be dug from the dry-as-dust sources of historic narrative in contemporary records, and the purpose of this paper is merely to show that the records contain material for such a narrative.

“There is no indication of the reason why the numbers of the clan when they first appear in record are found scattered over such a wide area of the Perthshire and Argyleshire Highlands, unless it be simply that they had spread over the adjacent lands and baronies as best they could, in consequence of their chiefs holding no land of the Crown. We find them located in Glenurchy and Glenloch, Strathfillan and Glendochart, Breadalbane and Balquidder, Glenlyon and Rannoch. Although by the immemorial custom of the Highlands, to which they most tenaciously clung, they owed military service to the chief of their own name only, he was not at any time within the ken of record in a position either to provide them with homesteads or protect them in their possessions. While the lands on which they had settled remained in the Crown they might be safe from eviction, but when the lands came to be granted out to local barons, the grantees naturally desired to settle their new estates with their own men, on whom they could depend for thankful service and punctual payment of rents. The MacGregors, on the other hand, in all such cases immediately found themselves in the position of occupants of the lands of owners to whom they were unacceptable as tenants, and who desired nothing better than to be rid of them at any price. The inevitable consequences followed—eviction, resistance, and retaliation. The evicted tenants sought shelter among their kinsmen who still possessed lands, as sub-tenants or squatters; or they became “broken men,” and betook themselves to the hills to live on the plunder of the lands from which they had been ejected.”

Referring to the Act passed in 1488

Early Ancestry

EXCERPTS from the "Baronage of Scotland," by Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie, Baronet, Edinburgh, 1798 :—

"I. Gregor¹ (third son of King Alpin) was brother to Kenneth, Donald, and Achaius MacAlpin; the two former of whom reigned successively, inter annos 834 et 859.

"II. Dongallus or Doun-gheal,² so called from his light brown complexion. Martin (who, by mistake, says he was son to Gregory the Great,³ though all historians are agreed that that monarch never had any issue), relates of this Doun-gheal, 'that he behaved most gallantly in the wars which King Gregory had in Ireland.'⁴ 'He married' (says the same learned antiquarian) 'Spontana, sister to Duncan, a king in Ireland, and their posterity got the name of MacGregor, all of them in this kingdom being descended from him.'⁵ He died about 900, leaving two sons—

³ Mr MacGregor Stirling derives the family from King Gregory, whose historical existence is acknowledged (see page 1), whilst no Prince Gregor, brother of Kenneth, can be traced. Abbot of the Monastery of Dunkeld.¹ Being a person of great piety and learning, and because of his father and grandfather's services to King Malcolm, St David the King changed that monastery into a Cathedral Church, anno 1127, and promoted the Abbe or Abbot Gregory to the new see, of which the Bishop obtained an ample ratification from Pope Alexander III. as well as an apostolical protection² to himself. He is witness to several Charters in the reign of King David and of Malcolm IV. From him the M^cNabs or the 'Sons of the Abbot' are undoubtedly descended. He lived to be the oldest Bishop of his time, and died ciriter 1169."

The notice of Bishop Gregory, to which reference is made, is thus given by Myln, who was a Canon of Dunkeld in the sixteenth century. The work is a Latin MS. of which there are several translations:—

"Gregory, who was at that time Prior of the Convent, and afterwards a Privy Counsellor, was the first Bishop. It was by his interest that the lands of Auchtertoul and thirty prebends were granted to the Bishop and Chapter of Dunkeld, as is contained in King David's Charter; Gregory procured in the strictest form, from Pope Alexander III., a protection for himself and his Church, in which writing all the possessions are reckoned which they held at that time. He sat in this see forty-two years, and died in the year 1169, which was the third year of the reign of King William."

From the "Chartulary":—

"Gregory, Abbot of Glendochart (where from early in the eighth century there had been a house of Culdees), next Abbot of Dunkeld, and on the erection of Dunkeld into an Episcopal see, the Bishop is said to have been a younger son of Sir John MacGregor of Glenurchay, and to have been the progenitor of the MacNabs, whose surname signifies 'Son of the Abbot,'³ 'the pale Abbot, MacGregor's son from Stronuidhme' (a place in Glenfalloch where he resided at ² Mill's MS. (Lives of the Bishops of Dunkeld).—Doug. Bar.

³ A note by MacGregor Stirling explains that Abbots in the time of the Culdees were allowed to marry; which, however, according to Myln, must have been altered directly afterwards, as he states that the "good King David changed Dunkeld into a Convent of Seculars, at the same time he got appointed a Bishop and Canons, about 1127." Dr Skene's investigations alter the date, places, and persons. "Myln is however wrong, both in the date and in the name of the Founder" ("Celtic Scotland," vol. ii. page 370). Alexander III. created, 1107, two additional Bishoprics for the more remote and Celtic portion of his Kingdom, the first was that of Moray, to which he appointed a Bishop named Gregorius; and the second was that of Dunkeld, which he revived in the person of Cormac." no great distance from St Phillans Church), is still proverbial in the Highlands" ("Baronage," Keith's Catalogue of the Scottish Bishops, etc.).

The following passages from Celtic Scotland by Mr Skene are here quoted to shew the conclusions to which he has arrived on the subject of the MacNabs:—

"The name of MacNab certainly means the son of the Abbot. In the seventh century St Fillan founded a monastery in Glendochart the upper part of which took its name of Strathfillan from him, and in the reign of King William we find the Abbot of Glendochart ranking along with the Earls of Atholl and Menteith. As the property possessed by the MacNabs lay in Glendochart, and we find the name of Gillefaelan, or servant of St Fillan, occurring in their oldest genealogy, we may certainly recognise in them the descendants of the lay Abbots of Glendochart."

Mr Skene goes on to say that as the son of Aoidh Urchayidh or Hugh of Glenurchay bore the name of Gillafaelan or servant of St Fillan, and as the MacGregors also possessed property in Glendochart, they were probably connected with the MacNabs.

"VIII. Sir Malcolm MacGregor of Glenurchy, eldest son of Sir John, was a man of reputation and authority in St David's time. He married Marjoriam, junioriem filiam Willielmi hostiarii, domini rigis nepotis. 'Marjory, youngest daughter of William,¹ Chief of the Army and nephew of our Lord the King.'

"Sir Malcolm was a man of incredible strength of body. Being of the King's retinue at a certain hunting party, in a forest, his Majesty having attacked a wild boar, or some other animal of prey, was like to be worsted, and in great danger of his life, when Sir Malcolm coming up, demanded his Majesty's permission to encounter it, the King having hastily answered, 'In,' or 'e'en do, bait spair nocht,' Sir Malcolm is said to have torn up a young oak by the root, and throwing himself between his Majesty and the fierce assailant, with the oak in one hand, kept the animal at bay till with the other he got an opportunity of running it through the heart. In honour whereof his Majesty was pleased to raise him to the peerage by the title of Lord MacGregor, to him 'et hæredibus masculis'; and in order to perpetuate the remembrance of the brave action, gave him an oak tree eradicate, in place of the fir-tree which the family had formerly carried. “Sir Malcolm² was called ‘Morefhir Callum nan Caistel,’ ‘Lord of the Castles,’ because of the several castles which he built; as those of Caol-Charn (now Kilchurn), beautifully situated at the north-east end of Lochow, and that of Finlarig, and the chapel which last was consecrated to the Blessed Virgin, and the old Castle of Taymouth, at least to have had their residence there and to have built Castle Coal Churin.”

The “Chartulary” has the following remarks regarding this Sir Malcolm, styled in Gaelic “Morair” (Lord):—

“He is asserted to have saved the life of the Sovereign, who must have been either Alexander I., or David I. or Malcolm IV., in the act of hunting, and when attacked by the wild boar, and to have then obtained in reward for his service that armorial bearing which, being emblematical of the exploit, forms, amid the wreck of written documents, one of the muniments of the Family.

With regard to the Arms the late Mr Donald Gregory sent to Sir Evan MacGregor a certified paper, signed by himself and his brother, John Gregory, Advocate, after a search made in the British Museum (9th June 1825), of which the following is a slightly abridged transcript:—

“The MS. No. 1371 of the Harleian Collection,³ in the British Museum, said to have been written and painted by Scotch, but bearing internal evidence of having been done by English hands, is titled ‘Scotica Nobilitas, 1589.’ The MS. contains:

1. The Achievements of King James VI., fo. 1.
2. The Achievements of the Earls of Scotland, twenty-four in number, fo. 2 to 25.
3. The Achievements of the Barons, forty in number, fo. 26 to 67.
4. The Shires of Scotland.
5. The Stewartries of Scotland, &c., &c.
10. Elenchus Baronum, of which the following is a copy.”

¹ This blazon was copied by Sir John MacGregor Murray, before 1710. The book was, about that time, exposed for sale, “with the late Mr Goodall’s effects,” and others believed to have belonged to the family of the former librarian of the Advocate’s Library.

² In the poem by Duncan MacDougall Maoil, in the Book of Lesmore, reference is made to “Malcolm who his wealth ne’er hid,” and in another poem to “Malcolm of unbending truth,”—see chapter ix., but his ancestry differs from that given in the “Baronage.”

³ This MS., and the coloured sketch of arms, has been verified by Sir Malcolm MacGregor of MacGregor, at the British Museum, Feb. 1897.

In this list of forty, unnecessary to be given here, MacGregoyre is placed thirty-eighth, not preceded, like all the others with one exception, by the letter L for Lord, thus—

- “ 37. MacGregoyre.
39. MacCloyd Heris.
40. L. of Lorne.”

“The Atchievement of Macgregoyre as painted fo. 64 is Argent a Pine Tree eradicate in bend sinister proper, surmounted of a sword in bend azure, hilted gules: in Chief an antique crown with points of the last; Crest a lyon's head erased proper, langued gules and crowned or. Supporters on the dexter an unicorn argent crowned and horned or, and on the sinister a deer proper crowned of the last.”

In Mr Gregory's letter of the same date he writes:—

“I am inclined to think that Workman may have taken his blazoning of Arms from this very MS., and from the company in which MacGregor is there placed have called him Lord MacGregor of Old.”

This conjecture is not altogether correct. The arms of MacGregor, as “Lord MakGzegour of Ould,” occur also in an illuminated MS. in the Lyon's office, Edinburgh, compiled about 1565-66 by an unknown hand. It became the property of James Workman, a Herald painter, whose name, with the date, 1623, it bears. This MS. has been reproduced in facsimile in the valuable book entitled “Scottish Arms, being a collection of Armorial Bearings, A.D. 1370-1678,” by W. R. Stoddart, published in 1880. The frontispiece of the present volume is taken from a plate in this work, a reproduction of the Arms in Workman's MS. It is remarkable that the shield in the Harleian Collection bears a pine tree eradicate, whilst in Workman's MS. (which is the oldest) a young oak tree is represented, also eradicate. The family of the present Chief carry the oak tree. There is a tradition that the pine tree was the original armorial “charge,” but that after the above related prowess of Sir Malcolm it was changed for the oak tree, which consequently pertained specially to his descendants and representatives. The Chiefs of Highland clans have the right to bear supporters, which right in other countries pertains generally to Peers only. On the title-page is given the shield, crest and motto to which all gentlemen of the Clan Gregor are entitled.¹

Although there may be no historical evidence as to this Sir Malcolm, the grant of armorial bearings, commemorating some hunting exploit, and the well established tradition of the MacGregor "Morar" (Lord) who built the Castles enumerated, affords reasonable probability to the main narrative. The actual date when the Arms were first given or first used is undiscoverable. But it was not till the reign of King William the Lion, 1165-1214, that arms were first borne in Scotland, and that King William chose as his cognisance the red "Lion rampant," which constitutes the Arms of Scotland.

"Sir Malcolm died, circiter 1164,² leaving three sons—

1. William, his heir.
2. Gregor, called "Gregor more graund," more because of his large stature, and "graund" on account of his being ill-favoured or ugly. Of him all the Grants are said to be descended.
3. Achaius (Hugh), of whom, by the traditions of the family, the Clan Achaius—now corruptly called Maccays or Mackays—are descended.

This theory of the descent of the Mackays is undoubtedly an error. They are now understood to be derived from the old Earldom of Sutherland. (See Skene's "Highlanders.") In the old MacGregor genealogy, given in the Dean of Lismore's MS., to be quoted farther on, one of the ancestors of the main stem of the Macgregors bears the name of Hugh, and appears to have flourished in the twelfth century. It is probable that this Achaius, or Hugh, was a more prominent representative than a third son, as stated in the "Baronage."

With reference to the derivation of the Grants, a family copy of the "Baronage" has a note, apparently in Mr MacGregor Stirling's handwriting.

² Probably the time when he flourished was thirty or forty years later, and it is possible that the two generations of Duncan a Straileadh, and his son, Duncan Beg, came in between Ian Borban Cath and Malcolm of the Castles.—Ed.

“In a history of the Family of Grant—in the possession of a respectable Cadet (Grant of Bonhard), composed before 1719, and denying the traditional account of the descent of the Grants from a younger son of the Laird of MacGregor—there is the following passage regarding the parents of Patrick Grant of Freuchie and Bellachastell, born about 982 :—‘Anlaw, or Allan, the eldest son and representative of Heming Grandt, a man of desirable accomplishments, is married to Mora, daughter to Neil MacGregor, a man lineally descended of Gregorius Magnus, King of Scotland. This Anlaw (others call him Avelass) got with Mora MacGregorie, in portion or tocher, the Barony of Bellachastell and Freuchie in Straspey.’ The grandson of Patrick (son of Mora MacGregor) was ‘Gregory Grant of Freuchie.’¹ The same passage occurs also in the ‘Chartulary’ with the remark : ‘This account, which differs materially from the title Grant of Grant, in Douglas’s Baronage—but is obviously preferable, and is confirmed by the other MSS. quoted—may serve to account for, and, at the same time, to correct the extant tradition of the common origin of the MacGregors and the Grants, whose armorial bearings have a strong affinity.”

In consequence of this passage (found, however, only in a modern genealogy), the date of A.D. 980 is assigned as the time when Neil MacGregor flourished; and he is conjectured to have been a son of Gregor of the Standard.²

“IX. William, Lord Macgregor, who flourished in the reign of William the Lyon, and Alexander II. He married filiam domini de Lindsay, and died ad annum 1238, leaving two sons and a daughter—

1. Gregor, his heir.
2. Alpin; who, being bred to the Church, was promoted to the Bishoprick of Dunblane; inter annos 1232 and 1290.”³

The “Chartulary” notices—

“From a collation of circumstances, a strong presumption arises that William’s wife was daughter of Lindsay of Bonhill, or Buchnull as it was anciently called. These Lindsays in the thirteenth century were hereditary Toschsadorachs, and Forresters of the Earls of Lennox.”

“X. Gregor,¹ Lord² of MacGregor (or, according to the ‘Chartulary,’ Gregor of Glenurquhay) succeeded, and joined King Alexander II. anno 1248 with his followers when that Monarch went upon his expedition for recovery of the western Isles from Haco, King of Norway. He also flourished in the reign of Alexander III. (inter 1249 et 1296). By his Lady Marion, filiam de Gilchrist, he was father of Malcolm XI.”

The “Baronage” adds a note that the writer has been unable to discover who the Gilchrist was, but the “Chartulary” has a remark—

“Circiter 1286. Died Gregor of Glenurchy, who married a daughter of Gilchrist (4th son as is believed of Aulin, 2nd Earl of Levenax), founding this belief on a Charter by Malduin, 3rd Earl of Lennox, 1238-9, of certain lands which is witnessed, it is to be remarked, by John Glendochir, Amalech my Brother, &c.”

In the “Baronage” the successor to Gregor No. 10 is given as—“XI. Malcolm (styled Dominus de MacGregor), a person of great loyalty, strongly attached to Bruce, whom he is said to have relieved from the chief of Lorn at Dalreogh, and to have been mounted on a milk-white steed.³ Thereafter the King harboured in a large cave in MacGregor’s lands, near Craig-Chrostan, which is to this day called “Uamh an Riogh” (the King’s cave), from which he crossed over Loch Lomond, and met the Earl of Lennox.

“Malcolm fought at the battle of Bannockburn, and is said to have been the person who brought the relics of St Fillansarum from the country of that name, then part of his lands, to King Robert’s chaplain, who passed it for a miracle, in consequence of which the Bruce founded a priory in Strathfillan⁴ (anno 1314). This Malcolm⁵ is much celebrated by several bards. He fought under Edward Bruce in Ireland, and having received a wound at the battle of Dundalk, of which he was ever afterwards lame, he retired home, and was known by the name of “Morfhear bachdach,” or the lame lord.

² The writers of the “Chartulary” do not consider that the title “Morer” (equivalent to Lord), by which Sir Malcolm was designated, was hereditary, even if it was ever formally bestowed; but after No. VII., styled Lord of Glenurchy in the “Baronage,” the “Chartulary” continues to quote the territorial designation.—Ed.

"He died at an advanced age, anno 1374, leaving by his wife Mary, daughter to Malise M^cAlpin of Finnich, two sons—

1. Gregor, his heir.
2. Gilbert, of whom it is said the Griersons of Lag descended."

The Griersons of Lag claim this descent, which is quite probable although it may not be susceptible of actual proof.

The existence of this second Malcolm seems to be well established by tradition and Highland poems. It is said that "Malcolm, chief of the family of MacGregor, had a command at the army of King Robert Bruce at Bannockburn," but the authority for this statement is not conclusive.¹ There is also mention of a Malcolm of Glendochart doing fealty to Edward of England, 28th August 1296. As Gregor (X.) is said to have flourished in the thirteenth century, it seems improbable that his son should have lived till 1374. Possibly one or two generations have been missed out before or after Malcolm. The MSS. of the Dean of Lismore contains a very interesting genealogy by an old Highland seannachie, giving the Glenstray pedigree. It is difficult to identify the list recorded in the "Baronage" with the names found therein, but in a subsequent chapter this genealogy will be transcribed.

From the unquestionable authority of the Obituary, known as the Chronicle of Fortingal,² the following entries are here given in chronological order:—

"1390, April 19. Died John, son of Gregor of Glenurquhay, and was buried in Dysart, north of the High Altar.

Dysart, q. d. Tigh sart—in English, "House of the Highest"—is the old name of the Church of Glenurquhay, which was annexed to Dalmally. John, son of Gregor, was surnamed Cham, or "blind of an eye," as appears from the two entries under 1415.

It is believed that he was the latest MacGregor in recognised possession of Glenurquhay, for his son is styled "in," not "of," that land; but "there does not seem ground to suppose that they ever had what alone, according to Saxon ideas of landed property, could secure continued possession, a charter of confirmation on their resignation into the King's hands. ("Chartulary.")

1415. Died Gregor, son of John Cham, in Glenurquhay, and was buried as first mentioned.

1415. Died John the Black (dhu), son of John Cham, son of Gregor at Stronmelochan, and was buried at Dysart.

Stronmelochan was a fortalice at the north-east extremity of Lochaw, near the entrance of Glenstray.

² Translation of Dean MacGregor's Chronicle, printed with the Historical Review, 1831.

The above entries, the Bard's genealogy, and others from "The Black Book of Taymouth," enable us to define positively that the house of Glenstray descended in direct line from this John Dhu, and as he had a brother, Gregor, who coincides with Gregor, surnamed Aulin, in the "Baronage," we are led to believe that these two Gregors were identical.

From the "Baronage" :—

"XII. Gregor, called Aulin (Aluinn)—i.e., "perfectly handsome"—succeeded. He married Iric, daughter of his uncle Malcolm M^cAlpin, son of the said Malise, and died circiter annum, 1413 leaving by his said lady five sons and several daughters—

1. Malcolm, his heir.
2. John, first designed of Breachd-sliabh, who eventually became Laird of MacGregor.
3. Gillespie, or Archibald, who married and had issue.
4. Gregor, of whom the family of Ruath shruth, or Roro (as will be shown later, the name of this son was probably Duncan).¹
5. Dugal Ciar."

In the course of this, the fourteenth century, the sovereigns had given many lands to those who supported them, and amongst these were territories occupied by the Clan Gregor as Crown tenants—i.e., settled on the Crown lands by royal favour, either as a reward for military services, or connected with the royal house, which tradition asserts, or the tribe may have enjoyed allodial occupation of these localities from time immemorial.

From the "Chartulary" :—

"Before 1340, Alexander Menzies, son and heir of the deceased Alexander Menzies,² gave a grant to 'Avunculo meo,' Yvaro Campbel, of all his lands in the Barony of Glendochart.

"In A.D. 1340, July 30th. Charter by Alexander Menzies, son and heir of Alexander de Menzies, Lord of Glendochart, to Ewar Campbell and his heirs, of 20 merks of land in Glendochart, dated at Kilmarnock, 30th July 1340.

² In 1374-6 Campbell is mentioned as having received it from the Crown, it is supposed on the forfeiture of Malcolm of Glendochart.

“1374, April 20th. Charter by King Robert II. to Arthur Campbell, son of Ewar Campbell, of the lands of Strathquhir, resigned by the said Ewar.

“1376, Feb. 9th. Charter by King Robert II., confirming one by his son Robert, Earl of Fife and Menteith, to Arthur Campbell of Strathquhir, of certain lands in the Barony of Glendochart, viz., amongst others, Kyleters, mor, and beg, Innerhardgowrane, with the Lake of Glendochart, and the Island of Garwhelane, and Wester Hardkell (Ardchalzie). “Mag. Sig.,” v. 50.

A pause may here fittingly be made, to clear the ground before proceeding to more historic times.

Chapter III

Sketch of Scottish History, 1285-1390

THE period succeeding the death of King Alexander III., in 1285, and of his young granddaughter, the Maiden of Norway, who died in September 1290, was the darkest of Scotland's history, only illumined by the patriotism of William Wallace, and subsequently of Robert Bruce. After a miserable reign of four years, John Baliol attempted to contend against Edward I. of England, but sustained a severe defeat at the battle of Dunbar, 28th April 1296. Wallace, after a few years of heroic struggles to deliver his country, was eventually captured, and beheaded on the 22nd August 1305. Bruce, King Robert I., was crowned at Scone, 29th March 1306, and gained the victory of Bannockburn 23rd June 1314. After his early death (June 1329) Scotland's troubles were again renewed, his son, David II., being only four years old at the time. Edward Baliol, son of John Baliol, invaded the country, gaining a victory at Dupplin, 1332, and Edward III. of England coming to his support, won the battle of Halidon Hill, near Berwick, 19th July 1333. But brave and skilful warriors were not wanting in Scotland, and having succeeded in winning back the castles and towns taken from them, they welcomed home in 1341 the young King David, who had taken refuge in France. Having subsequently invaded England, he was made prisoner at the battle of Neville's Cross, near Durham, 17th October 1346, and remained in captivity till Scotland was able to ransom him in 1359. Peace was at length restored, till the death of David II., February 1370-71.

The dynasty of the Stewarts now came to the throne. Walter, the Lord High Steward of Scotland, having married Lady Marjory Bruce, eldest daughter of King Robert I., their son Robert Stewart succeeded his uncle as King Robert II., and reigned till his death, April 1390.

All that is known of the ClanGregor during this stormy period is ably discussed in a paper by Mr Donald Gregory, entitled "Historical Notices of the ClanGregor," which Essay was read to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, 22nd March 1830, and printed in the "Archæologia Scotica," vol. iv. As this paper is now out of print, and not in general circulation, quotations may here be freely given.¹

"An early, if not the original, seat of the ClanGregor (one of the few families in the Highlands which, so far as male descent is concerned, can be regarded as purely Celtic), a family which is generally allowed to be one of the most ancient and renowned of the Highland tribes, was the valley of Glenurchy, in the district of Lorn. From Glenurchy, accordingly, they took their style for many generations.

"It appears that John of Glenurchy—the chief, probably, of the family—was made prisoner by King Edward of England at the battle of Dunbar, anno 1296; and that he had afterwards his lands and possessions restored by order of that monarch, on condition of going to France to serve him in his wars in that kingdom. In the public instruments connected with the fate of those of the Scottish leaders captured at Dunbar, John de Glenurchy is ranked as one of the "Magnates Scotiæ," a proof that his possessions holding of the Crown were far from inconsiderable. This individual had—as would seem—died in France; for his name does not again appear in any of the transactions of the period. He left a daughter and heiress, Margaret, who carried the Barony of Glenurchy to her husband, John, son of Sir Neil Campbell of Lochawe, by Lady Mary Bruce, sister of King Robert. This John Campbell, on whose mother her Royal brother had conferred the Earldom of Athole, became in her right Earl of Athole. He fell in the battle of Halidon Hill, anno 1333, leaving issue by his wife,² a child, who survived a few years only. On the death of this child, the Barony of Glenurchy appears to have returned to the family of MacGregor, for there is undoubted evidence of the death, so late as 1390, of John MacGregor of Glenurchy. I have been thus minute in tracing the history of this barony, as I conceive it to have been the last freehold possession of any consequence held by the name of MacGregor."

In the "Chartulary," the documents connected with Edward I.'s prisoners are given at full length.

"Johannes de Glenurchart, one of several 'Scottish Magnates' is taken prisoner in the battle of Dunbar.

"Mandate by Edward I. of England, 31st of July 1297, bearing the title, 'King

² Margaret de Glenurchy must have been his first wife.—See p. 28.

Edward commands that the Scottish Magnates captured in the battle of Dunbar, and about to fight for him in France and elsewhere, be liberated from prison.—(Rotuli Scotiæ)—1297, July 31st. ‘The King (Edward I.) to the Constable of the Castle of Berkhamsted, greeting. Whereas John de Glenurchart, lately captured in the conflict that took place betwixt us and the Scots at Dunbar, and by our command detained in the prison of the said castle, hath found before our beloved and faithful Walter de Bello Campo (Beauchamp), Steward of our household, sufficient bail that he shall immediately pass with us in our service to the countries beyond seas, and that he shall well and faithfully serve us against the King of France, and other Rebels and Enemies to us in time to come, as in the foresaid Bail Bond, recorded in presence of the said Steward, is fully contained. We command you that ye cause ye body of the foresaid John to be liberated from our prison of the said castle without any delay whatsoever in the foresaid manner.’—Rotuli Scotiæ.

“Charter by King David II. of Scotland ‘To Margaret de Glenurchy and to John Campbell, her spouse’ (Earl of Atholl), ‘of the lands of Glenurchly.’”¹

Between 1329, June 28th, death of King Robert Bruce; and 1333, July 19th, battle of Halidon Hill.

“John Campbell, younger son of Sir Neil Campbell of Lochaw by Lady Mary Bruce, sister of King Robert I., was created Earl of Atholl on the forfeiture of David de Strathbogie, circa 1314. He married Margaret, heiress of Glenurchy, daughter, most probably, of John de Glenurchart, captured at the Battle of Dunbar, 1296; who had, in virtue of a warrant by Edward I. of England, 31st July (same year), been ordered to deliver up his eldest son (if he had one) as a hostage. It is unknown whether he had a son. John Campbell, Earl of Atholl, was killed at the Battle of Halidon Hill.”

The “Historical Notices” proceed:—

“Glendochart is another district with which the Clan appears to have been connected at an early period. John Glendochir witnesses a charter by Malduin, third Earl of Lennox, 3d March 1238, and Malcolm and Patrick de Glendochart, probably sons of John, do homage to Edward I. at Berwick-upon-Tweed, 28th August 1296, being a short while after the disastrous conflict of Dunbar. In the lists of the Scots on this occasion, printed by Prynne, Malcolm de Glendochart is mentioned twice, and in separate places, once as Malcolm de Glendochart simply, and again, in company with amongst others Alexander de Argyle (Lord of Lorn), as King's Tenant in Perthshire. From these facts the obvious inference is, that Malcolm de Glendochart held lands both as a free baron and as a kindly tenant. That the individuals designed of Glendochart were MacGregors appears highly probable, when, in addition to the well-known fact of the long settlement of the Clan in this quarter, we find that the names Malcolm and Patrick were common in the tribe.

¹ Index of missing charters by William Robertson, Esq., one of the Deputies of the Lord Clerk-Register for keeping the Records of Scotland, 1798. The terms of this missing charter are not known. All the charters extant in the general Register House, Edinburgh, in the reigns of Robert I., David II., Robert II. and III., and in the regency of Robert, Duke of Albany, have since been printed. The charter quoted in the text is not among them. Those reigns, and that regency, comprehend the period over which Mr Robertson's index extends. A MS. index in 1629 is the source of the information regarding this missing charter.—Note in “Chartulary.”

"But these were not the only territories in which the ClanGregor succeeded in gaining a footing. The numbers of the name that have for centuries been found in the adjacent districts of Rannoch, Glenlyon, Glenloch, Strathfillan, and Balquhiddy, and in Breadalbane generally, to all of which there is easy access from Glenurchy, testify the ancient power of the family, and warrant the supposition that parts at least of these ample territories were held as free baronies by the chieftains of the Clan.

"If this supposition be thought not unreasonable, it will not be difficult to account for the loss of many of these possessions under the reign of Robert Bruce.

"The Lord of Lorn, who married a sister of John Cumin the Black, brother-in-law of King John Baliol, took, as is well known, a very active part in favour of Baliol, and after the dethronement of that unfortunate prince, attached himself to the Cumin party, displaying a constant and energetic opposition to the claims of Bruce. The family of MacGregor, from the situation of their principal property, Glenurchy, in Lorn, and probably through their possessions in Perthshire also, were necessarily in strict alliance and otherwise closely connected with the house of Lorn, and would naturally follow the fortunes of that very powerful family, in a question more especially admitting of so much dispute as that of the succession to the Scottish Crown. We find, accordingly, that Bruce had no sooner established himself on the throne, than the house of Lorn, with all its followers and allies, suffered severely by forfeiture. Nor were the MacGregors exempted from their share of the loss. Glenurchy could not be forfeited, being the property of an heiress and a minor; but the wardship and the marriage were probably given by the King to Sir Neil Campbell of Lochawe, his brother-in-law. Glendochart was granted to Alexander Menzies, who had married Egidia, sister to the High Steward, husband to the Princess Marjory Bruce. The barony of Fortingal became, by the royal bounty, the property of Thomas Menzies, son, probably, of Alexander; and part of Rannoch fell by the same process to the ancestor of the family of Strowan Robertson, who had been a staunch adherent to Bruce. To the power of the Clan-

Gregor these various grants must have given a fatal blow ; and it is from this reign that we must date the downfall of this ancient tribe.

“Some of the Clan however appear to have taken the other side, for in 1293 John Baliol, then King of Scotland, issued a mandate to Alexander de Ergadia (Lord of Lorn), and to the Bailie of Lochawe, charging them to summon ‘Sir Angus MacDonald, Knight, Lawmund MacGregor, and Angus, son of Duncan MacGregor,’ to appear in the royal presence on a specified day, to do homage, and various other things obligatory upon them. The first of these three individuals is evidently the son and heir of the Lord of the Isles, and the same as he who proved afterwards so steady a friend to Robert Bruce. It would thus seem that Sir Angus, and the two MacGregors mentioned along with him, and who, from the terms of the writ, are evidently free barons holding their lands of the Crown, had not acquiesced in the award which placed Baliol on the Scottish throne ; an inference which, as it seems perfectly legitimate, will serve to account for Glenurchy’s being, as we have seen, in 1390, the property of John MacGregor. This, however, did not prevent the chiefs of the Campbells who, by their close alliance with the new dynasty, had now commenced that rise which has not been less permanent than it was rapid, from acquiring a superiority over the MacGregors, which was improved by every succeeding generation.”

Dr Joseph Anderson has the following remarks or “resumé” on this subject :—¹

“The earliest notice of the Clan Gregor shows them settled in Glenurchay, Glendochart, Breadalbane, Glenloch, Glenlyon, Rannoch, and Balquhiddy, but not holding their lands of the Crown. Before the date of Robert Bruce there are incidental notices of the MacGregors of Glenurchay, but the forfeiture of the House of Lorn, with all its followers and allies, with whom undoubtedly the MacGregors were closely allied, deprived them of their possessions. Glenurchay was at that time the property of an heiress and a minor, and the ward and marriage of Margaret de Glenurchay² seems to have been given to John Campbell,³ son of Sir Nigel (or Neil), who was created Earl of Atholl, and fell at Hallidon Hill, 1333. There was one child of the marriage, who survived a few years only, and the Barony of Glenurchay seems to have returned to the MacGregors, for there is a John MacGregor of Glenurchay in 1390.

² After the death of this Margaret de Glenurchay, the Earl of Atholl must have married again, for Mr Skene quotes a “dispensation in 1339 for the marriage of Johanna, Countess of Stratherne, widow of John, Earl of Atholl, to Maurice de Moraira.”—Celtic Scotland, vol. iii., appendix, page 452.

³ 5th April 1357-8.—Charter of whole lands of Glenurchy by King David II. in favour of Mariota of Glenurchy, daughter of John of Glenurchy, and spouse of John Campbell.—Dr Anderson.

"Immediately after this we find the Campbells of Lochaw in possession of Glenurchay, and a family of MacGregors as vassals of the Earl of Argyle in Glenstrae. There is no evidence to show how the barony of Glenurchay passed from the MacGregors to the Campbells, but in the Black Book of Taymouth . . . it is stated that Colin Campbell, second son of Sir Duncan Campbell of Lochaw, was the first Laird of Glenurchay of the line of Lochaw. In point of fact he had a charter from his father in 1432 of the barony of Glenurchy, and afterwards, by marriage with the heiress, acquired a third of the great Lordship of Lorn. This Sir Duncan Campbell was King's Lieutenant in Argyleshire."

Continuing the Historical Notice of the Clan, the account of their possessions may now be followed:—

"At what time the barony of Glenurchy was finally lost to the MacGregors by becoming, as it did, the property of the Campbells, is a point on which, so far as I can learn, there is no extant evidence. Nor is it certainly known how the change took place. It has been stated from good authority that John MacGregor of Glenurchy died in 1390; this individual was contemporary with Sir Colin Campbell of Lochawe, of whom I find it said, in a manuscript history of the Campbells, that he added greatly to the property of his family. The words of the manuscript are:—'But never any of that family showed himself a more worthy man than he, according to the times he lived to see; and although, by every one of his predecessors, some lands were added to the estate and honours of that family, yet none of them purchased more of both than he. In effect, he it was (as the proverb is) who broke the ice and opened a door to all the after grandeur of the family, by suppressing the Islanders and curbing all oppressors.' Duncan, first Lord Campbell, son of Sir Colin above mentioned, married a daughter of Robert, Duke of Albany, brother of King Robert III., and many years Governor of Scotland. This Duncan, Lord Campbell, long known as Sir Duncan Campbell of Lochawe, was one of the wealthiest and most powerful of the Scottish barons. He held, under the Jameses I. and II., the office of King's Lieutenant in Argyleshire, which invested him with very extensive powers against rebels to the King's authority. Whether he exercised those powers to strip the MacGregors of the territory of Glenurchy, or inherited this possession from his father, are points on which it is impossible to come to a decision. This much however is certain, that he possessed Glenurchy, and gave it in patrimony to a younger son, Sir Colin, founder of the House of Breadalbane, who is mentioned in a Charter by the style of Glenurchy, anno 1442.

"I have now brought down the history of the ClanGregor to the time when I find them in a situation totally different from that of any other Clan in the Highlands, namely, without an acre of land held free of the Crown. Although, however, this was a very singular situation for a Clan so numerous, and so long and extensively established, I have not discovered, from any authentic source whatever, that they had at this time become distinguished any more than the neighbouring tribes for a predatory disposition. In Perthshire the Crown still possessed extensive lands on which the Chieftains of the tribe were seated, nominally as Crown tenants, but in reality, from the unsettled state of the country, as absolute proprietors; their numbers, and their warlike habits, making it very difficult, or next to impossible, for the Crown to enforce payment of their rents. Such a state of things could not last. During the government of Albany accordingly, and in the minorities of the four immediate successors of James I., owing to the above, and other causes not less important, these lands gradually passed into the possession of the various powerful barons in that part of the country whom it was the interest of a weak government to conciliate.

“Although it be well known that the Duke of Albany, in order to strengthen his party during the captivity of James I., dilapidated the royal revenues to a very great extent by bribing the most powerful families with grants of the Crown-lands on very favourable terms in every part of the kingdom; yet I have not been able to trace any such transactions relating to that part of Perthshire of which we speak, while he held the government. It appears, however, that the Governor himself, besides the lands which he held in the Highlands as Earl of Menteith, and as heir to the earldom of Fife,¹ acquired extensive possessions in Breadalbane. He had, in 1375, a royal charter of the lands and barony of Glendochart, proceeding on the resignation of Alexander de Menzies. A large portion of this territory, comprehending Glenfalloch, Strathfillan, and the upper half of Glendochart, was held under Albany, by Arthur Campbell of Strachur,² the representative of a family which had long been seated in this part of the country. The lands conveyed to Campbell (afterwards erected into the barony of Glenfalloch) were in later reigns, and we may therefore presume, at this time also, almost exclusively occupied by the Clan Gregor.

“The mischievous system, introduced by Albany, of granting the Crown-lands to those whose support he wished to gain, without reference, as may be easily supposed, to the antiquated claims of the Celtic occupants, was checked for a time under the active and vigorous sway of James I., but during a century after the untimely death of that monarch, and particularly under the long minorities with which Scotland was afflicted during this melancholy period of her history, we can trace the rise of several distinguished families, through their acquisition, principally, of the hereditary property of the Crown. A contemporary writer of undoubted authority says, under the year 1452, 'Ther wes sindrie landis gevin to sindrie men oe the Kingis Secreit Counsall, the quhilk men that is to say, the Lord Campbell, to Schir Colyne Campbell, to Schir Alexander Hwme, to Schir David Hwme, to Schir James Keyr, and to uther sindrie, quha wer rewardit be the said Secreit Counsall, the quhilk men demyt wald nocht stand.'¹ Many such grants having been made during the minorities of the respective sovereigns were, on their attaining their majority, revoked; whilst others, according to the influence of the grantees, were confirmed. The uncertainty attending these new titles to the Crown-lands must doubtless have encouraged the actual occupants to despise the authority of the charters by which overlords were imposed upon them, and in many cases, from families with whom they had long been at mortal feud. The MacGregors, as may be supposed, soon rendered themselves obnoxious to such of the families as had been fortunate enough to obtain charters to any of these lands; and consequently it became, in almost every instance, an object of the new proprietors to expel them. Resistance, though natural enough, became in the end ruin to the weaker party; and it may, I think, be safely affirmed that, in proportion as the MacGregors, from being kindly tenants of the Crown, became subject to their neighbours, who had a greater interest and better opportunities, and were consequently more successful than the King and his Bailies had been formerly, in depriving them of lands to which they could produce no better title than occupancy, the Clan grew remarkable for opposition to law and order.

"This position will appear to have a better foundation if we enter a little more into detail as regards the history of the Campbells of Glenurchy, the family of Menzies, and of others of the Perthshire families closely connected, in one way or another, with the ClanGregor.

"In the reign of James III., but in what year is uncertain, Sir Colin Campbell, first of Glenurchy, acquired the large barony of Lawers, on Loch Tay, in the hands of the Crown since the forfeiture of Thomas Chalmer, who had been executed for aiding in the murder of James I. He acquired also the lands of Achriach or Achinrevach² in Glendochart, which, along with Lawers, he gave to his youngest son John, ancestor of the Campbells of Lawers.

"In 1473 John Stewart of Fortingal, and Neil Stewart³ his son and heir, had from the King a nineteen years' lease of the lands and lordship of Apnadull, Glen coich, Glenlyon, Strathbrawin, and Rannoch, all in Perthshire.¹ They had, besides, a royal grant, for the same term, of the office of bailiary of those lands ; and it was at the same time provided that they should have the lands of Rannoch free of all duties and services during the whole of the period above mentioned—a plain proof that, so far as Rannoch was concerned, it was not expected to prove, in any other way at least, beneficial to the lessees. This lease expired in 1492, and, to Stewart's mortification, was not renewed. A great part of the power which it had conferred on this family passed, as we shall have occasion to see, into the hands of Glenurchy.

“In the minority of James IV., anno 1488, being the first of his reign, a Parliamentary Act was passed for the ‘stanching of thift, reiff, and uther inormiteis throw all the realme ;’ and amongst others of the barons, the following became bound to seek out and punish such as should be guilty of those crimes in the districts over which their authority in cumulo extended, and they were for this purpose furnished with extensive powers—viz., Duncan Campbell of Glenurchy, Neil Stewart of Fortingal, and Ewyne Campbell of Strachur (proprietor of Glenfalloch). The districts were Disher and Toyer,² Glenurchy, Rannoch, Apnadull, Glenlyon, and Glenfalloch. It is evident that if this Act was enforced at all, it must have fallen with accumulated severity upon the landless and consequently desperate Clan Gregor. It is much to be doubted, however, if the morals of this now obnoxious race would be greatly improved by such discipline ; and whether it was not rather to be expected that their feelings, in the situation in which they found themselves placed relatively to these powerful barons, must, in even a people far less high-spirited, have been indignation and the thirst of vengeance.

“Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurchy, in this reign, made vast additions to the property of his family in Perthshire. He acquired the King's lands of Balloch (now Taymouth), and others on Loch Tay, in 1492. About the same time he obtained the important office of Bailiary of the Crown-lands of Disher and Toyer, Glenlyon and Glendochart, in most of which he was moreover the principal tenant. The acquisition of the office of bailiary was in this, as in most other cases, merely a prelude to the lands becoming hereditary in his family. Accordingly, in 1502, he had a charter of the lands of Glenlyon, which he gave to his son Archibald, founder of the family of Campbell of Glenlyon. Some years later he acquired, from private individuals, the barony of Fynlarig, at the west end of Loch Tay; the lands of Scheane (Shian) and others, and the lands of Crannych—all in the same district; so that before his death (in the battle of Flodden) in 1513, he had undoubtedly become one of the most influential barons of Perthshire; and if we take into account his possessions in Argyle, there were few barons of greater power in Scotland.

² The Lordship of Disher and Toyer comprehended the lands on both sides of Loch Tay (with some exceptions), and likewise the rich valley of Glenlochay, lying between Glenlyon and Glendochart. Disher and Toyer are Gaelic, the former signifying a tract of country having a southern exposure, the latter a northern. The three last notes occur in the “Historical Notices.”

"Whilst the Laird of Glenurchy was thus extending the influence of his house in one part of the territory occupied by the ClanGregor, the head of the ancient family of Menzies followed his example in another. Robert Menzies of that Ilk had (1502) a royal charter of what remained to the Crown of the lands of Rannoch, a district claimed by the Clan as more peculiarly their own.

"It may naturally be supposed that these proceedings were viewed with a favourable eye, neither by the MacGregors (the actual occupants) nor by the Stewarts of Fortingal, so lately all but proprietors of Glenlyon and Rannoch. Deadly feuds immediately arose; and the ink on his charter of Rannoch had scarcely dried when Menzies's Castle of Weyme was burnt to the ground by Neil Stewart and his associates, and all his lands laid waste.¹

"These dissensions attracted the attention of the Government, and in 1504 the Earl of Athole, a near kinsman of Stewart, Stewart himself, and the Lairds of Glenurchy and Strowan Robertson, with MacGregor, were summoned to attend Parliament on a charge of treason. What the final result was does not appear. Rannoch was still the theatre of intestine broils, nor could the chartered holder make good his title by actual possession. To strengthen himself, he, in 1505, entered into a contract with the Earl of Huntly, which contained, among others, the following stipulations:—(1) Menzies's eldest son, Sir Robert, became bound to marry Lady Jean Gordon, the Earl of Huntly's daughter. (2) The lands of Rannoch were by Menzies let to Huntly for five years, the latter binding himself to stock it with the best and most obedient tenants that could be found; and also to assist and maintain the Laird of Weyme and his son in the peaceable enjoyment of their lands in Perthshire, to aid them in all cases of need, and to help them in getting tenants for their lands."

The "Chartulary" gives, under date 1504-5, March 15th, the following:—

"In the actioun and causse persewit be Robert Menzies of that Ilk Kny^t aganis Nele Stewart of Fothergilt, for the wranguss destruction and down casting of his Mension place and Fortalice of the Weme, and for the burning and destruction of divers vittualles in sicht gudes &c."—with details of the same. remarks of another Decreet ("No MacGregors unless Duncan Patrikson be one.")¹

"About this time Neil Stewart resigned his lands of Fortingal to Huntly.² All the power, however, of this nobleman, which the acquisition of Fortingal tended to increase in relation to the projected settlement of Rannoch, failed to put his ally Menzies in quiet possession of this turbulent territory. In 1523, Menzies having by Janet, Countess of Athole,³ been charged to expel thence the Laird of MacGregor and his Clan, on account of some depredations alleged to have been committed by them upon the Countess's tenants, stated to the Lords of Council that it was impossible for him to comply, 'seeing that the said MacGregor on force enterit the said Robertis landis of Rannoche, and withholdis the samyn from him maisterfullie, and is of fer gretar powar than the said Robert, and will nocht be put out be him of the saidis landis.'⁴ Upon this statement he was absolved from all liability till the matter should be further investigated. Several years appear to have passed over before any very vigorous measures were taken against the ClanGregor in this quarter. In 1530 the Laird of Enoch, Menzies of that Ilk, 'askit instrumentis that without sum gud rewle be fundin for the ClanGregour, he may nocht ansuer for his landis, nor be bundin for gud rewle in the samin as he allegit.' It was probably in consequence of this representation that, in 1531, John, Earl of Athole, was sent by the King against the offenders, and succeeded in taking the Castle in the Isle of Loch Rannoch, and in expelling thence the 'brokin men of the ClanGregour.' The negligence of the government, however (which can only be accounted for from the King being engaged at this time in reducing the Islemen to obedience), neutralised any good effects that might have been expected to result from Athole's success; for in December 1531 we find the Earl complaining that his expenses in this expedition, which he states to have been very high, had not been reimbursed

She was apparently Janet, youngest daughter of sixth Lord Forbes, second wife of John Stewart, third Earl of Atholl, who died 1542; but as the Earl's first wife, Grizel Rattray, did not die before March 1537, there seems to be an error in dates.—Ed.

to him, and that the whole charge of garrisoning and keeping the Castle, from the time of the siege in October preceding, had been defrayed by him in addition, notwithstanding repeated applications to the Council on the subject; and finally, making a solemn protest that any inconvenience that might arise from the Council refusing or delaying to receive the Castle from him should not be laid to his charge. It may be presumed that his complaints still passed unheeded, and that the Earl in disgust left the Island Fortress to be occupied by the former inhabitants; for no great time elapsed before the Laird of Weyme found himself under the necessity of obtaining an exemption from answering for the police of his lands of Rannoch, on the score of the alleged untameable insubordination of the Clan Gregor dwelling therein. This state of things was in full force so late as the year 1684, when Sir Alexander Menzies of Weyme obtained an exemption of this kind, which refers to two former exemptions granted by Mary of Guise, Queen-Regent, and by her daughter, Queen Mary, respectively. It was long after even this late period ere the family of Menzies succeeded in enforcing all the rights of free property in this large barony." ¹

Chapter IV

Sketch of the Reign of King James I

KING JAMES I., born in 1390, was captured by the English on his way to be educated in France, shortly before his father, King Robert III.'s death, which took place 4th April 1406. The first part of his reign the sovereign power was exercised by the King's uncle, the Duke of Albany, who was succeeded as Regent by his son Murdoch. King James I. returned from his captivity in England in 1424. He was an energetic ruler who sought to curb the power of his nobles, and also to crush the Highlands by severe measures. Tytler in his "History of Scotland," regarding this reign, gives the following description of the country at that time :—

"Besides such Scoto-Norman barons, however, there were to be found in the Highlands and Isles, those fierce aboriginal chiefs who hated the Saxon and the Norman race, and offered a mortal opposition to the settlement of all intruders within a country which they considered their own. They exercised the same authority over the various clans and septs, of which they were the heads or leaders, which the baron possessed over his vassals and their military followers; and the dreadful disputes and collisions which perpetually occurred between these distinct ranks of potentates, were accompanied by spoliations, ravages, imprisonments and murders which at length became so frequent and so far extended that the whole country beyond the Grampian range was likely to be cut off, by these abuses, from all regular communication with the mere pacific parts of the Kingdom."¹

Amongst sundry enactments in the Parliament held in March 1424, the following was issued :—

"46. Anent remissions to be given, and assithment or partie, Item it is ordained be the Parliament, that quhair the King gives remissiones til onie man, with condition to assyth the partie skaithed and compleinand; That consideratioon be had of the Hieland men, the quhilkis before the Kingis hame cumming commonlie reft and slew ilk ane utheris; bot in the Lawlands quhair the skaithes done may be kend of all, or of part that there be chosen gud men and leil sworne thereto, to modifie amendis after the qualitie and quantitie of the person, and of the skaithes, gif the parties cannot concorde be themselves; or the quhilks modifications, baith the parties sall hold them content."¹

Mr Tytler thus comments on this part of the Act:—

“It was declared to be the intention of the sovereign to grant a remission or pardon of any injury committed upon person or property in the lowland districts of his dominions, where the defaulter made reparation, or, according to the Scottish phrase, ‘assythement,’ to the injured party, and where the extent of the loss had been previously ascertained by a jury of honest and faithful men; but from this rule the Highlands were excepted, where on account of the practice of indiscriminate robbery and murder which had prevailed, previous to the return of the King, it was impossible to ascertain correctly the extent of the depredation, or the amount of the assythement. The condition of his northern dominions, and the character and manners of his Highland subjects, whose allegiance was of so peculiar and capricious a nature, had given birth to many anxious thoughts in the King, and led not long after this to a personal visit to these remote regions, which formed an interesting episode in his reign.”²

The murder of King James I. by the traitor Graham, in February 1436, again plunged Scotland into the troubles of a long minority amidst rival factions seeking their own interests.

The following entries relating to the fifteenth century are taken from the “Chartulary” :—

“1436-7, Feb. 18. King James I. murdered at Perth. Henry MacGregor appears to have been an actor in the murder, and to have suffered death for his share in that barbarous deed. The proof of this is contained in a charter³ of King James III. in favour of Robert de Ros, dated 14th August 1479. ‘James (III.) by the Grace of God, &c.: Whereas it hath lately come to our knowledge that the late Henry M^cGregour, father of the late Murdac Henrisoune, was present at the traiterous and most cruel death of our late most serene grandfather, the most illustrious James I., King of Scots, and for this was executed, and the said Murdac, son of this traitor,

Enactments for Tranquillising the Highlands 39

King James III. was killed at the battle of Sauchie Burn, 18th June, 1488. The notices of the Clan during the previous stormy period are meagre. The Obituary has the following entries :—¹ “ 1440, April 20th. Death of Malcolm, son of John dhu MacGregor, at Glenurquhay, on the 20th of April ; he was buried in the manner formerly mentioned.

“ 1461. Death of Patrick MacGregor, Laird of Glenstray,² at Stronemelochane ; he was buried in Dysart, in the way before mentioned.

“ 1477, February 17th. Death of Duncan Beg MacGregor, at Roro.”³

In the first Parliament after the accession of James IV., held in Edinburgh, 17th October 1488,

“ A determined effort was made for the putting down of theft, robbery, and murder—crimes which were at this moment grievously prevalent—by dividing the kingdom into certain districts, over which were placed various Earls and Barons, to whom full authority was entrusted, and who promised on oath that they would, by their uttermost power, exert themselves in the detection and punishment of all offenders.⁴

“ On this occasion, the districts of ‘ Renfrew, with Dumbarton, the Lennox, Bute and Arran,’ were entrusted to the Earl of Lennox, Lord Lisle, and Matthew Stewart ; Stirlingshire to the Sheriff of Stirlingshire and James Shaw of Sauchie ; Menteith and Strathgartney to Archibald Edmonston ; Glenurquhart, Glenlyon, and Glenfalloch to Neill Stewart, with Duncan and Ewin Campbell ; Athole, Strathern, and Dunblane to the Earl of Athole, Lord Drummond, and Robertson of Strowan.”⁵

The following is the text of part of the enactment :—

“ Item anent the stanching of Theft, Reft, and other enormities through all the realm ; the Lords underwritten have made faith and given their bodily oaths to our Sovereign Lord in this his parliament, that they, and each of them, shall diligently with all care and besinace, search and seek where any such trespassers are found or known within their bounds, and to take them and justify them, or make them to be sent to our Sovereign Lord to be justified. And they shall have power of our Sovereign Lord, under his white wax, to take and punish the said trespassers without favour according to Justice. And also to give them power to cause others, small Lairds within their bounds, to mak faith likewise ; And to

The quotations are given by express permission of the Author.

In the reign of James IV. great progress was made towards the general pacification of the country.

“The policy which he adopted was, to separate and weaken the clans by arraying them in opposition to each other, to attach to his service by rewards and preferment some of their ablest leaders, to maintain a correspondence with the remotest districts, and gradually to accustom their fiercest inhabitants to habits of pacific industry, and a respect for the restraints of the laws.” For the purpose of quieting the lowland districts the king adopted a system of engaging the most powerful of the resident nobles and gentry in a covenant or band which under severe penalties obliged them to maintain order throughout the country.”³ Proud of the success attending his efforts James IV. set out “on horseback unaccompanied even by a groom, with nothing but his riding cloak cast about him, his hunting knife at his belt, and six and twenty pounds for his travelling expenses in his purse. He rode, in a single day, from Stirling to Perth across the Mounth, and through Aberdeen to Elgin.”

But in the disastrous year 1513 King James IV. and the “flower of his nobility” unfortunately fell at Flodden, while his only son was still an infant.

The minority of James V. was a time of great trouble to the nation, and little heed was taken of the Highlands. In 1528 many contentions occurred in the Isles, and the King showed much skill in conciliating the island chiefs. But other troubles occupied the King's short life, and wearied and worn he expired in the thirty-first year of his age, on the 13th December 1542.

¹ The lands conveyed by this Charter were those of Crandyncht or Crannoch, north-west side of Loch Tay.

Chapter V

15th Century—Various Conflicts

“MALCOLM (son of Gregor Aulin) succeeded his father, but dying soon after unmarried, in 1420, was succeeded by his second brother.

“XIII.¹ John MacGregor of that Ilk (formerly of Brackly), a man of very martial spirit. In his days the Knight of Lochow found means to stir up the M^cNabs to insult the MacGregors, in consequence of which, a party of the latter fought the Clan an Abba at Chrianlarich, and cut them off almost to a man. Lochow, having on that pretence obtained letters of fire and sword against both Clans, got military force to assist him in reducing them; and, after many bloody skirmishes, fought in conjunction by both, in which many of their enemies were destroyed, they in the end lost part of their lands, which the Knight of Lochow and his friends assumed possession of. (“Scots Magazine, May 1768, p. 226; observation on Act 4, Parliament 1st.—James I.)

“John married a daughter of the Laird of M^cLachlan, and died in 1461, leaving three sons—

- (1) Malcolm, his heir.
- (2) Gregor of Breachd-sliabh.
- (3) John.

“Margaret, his daughter, married Lauchlan mor Macquarie, Chief of that Clan. John died anno 1461, and was succeeded by his eldest son, “XIV. Malcolm, who lived in the reigns of King James III. and IV. In this Laird’s days, the MacGregors lost many more of their lands. They had been provoked to chastise the MacNabs, in a manner not at all unusual in every corner of the Highlands in those days; but, as they had never been disloyal to the Royal Family, they considered the letters of fire and sword, obtained as above, as marking them rebels, “not by their own acts, but by the act of their sovereign or of his ministers,” and because they did not tamely yield possession of their lands to the King’s forces, whom they looked upon as the executive tools of ambitious individuals, his Majesty, by insidious information (and because the MacGregors had been formidable adherents to his father, James III., against the faction which he, while Prince, had headed, and which proved the death of his late Majesty), was much incensed against them.

"In consequence of which they lost great part of their lands. Seumas Beg, descended from a natural son of the Duke of Albany, possessed himself of the country of Balquhider, and several other lands, and Sir Colin Campbell, as second son of the Knight of Lochow, became Laird of Glenurquhay. They lost the lordship of Glendochart, the extensive lands and Baileries of the countries of Desser (Deasser) and Tuar (Tuath)—the south and north sides of Loch Tay—Glenlyon, the Port of Loch Tay, the country of Rannoch, the Barony of Finlarig, "with the Castle, town, and fortalice," the lands of Shian, Balloch—now called Taymouth—and Achrioch, &a., &a.," inter annos 1465 and 1504.¹

The "Baronage" states that Malcolm was first married to a daughter of MacIntosh, by whom he had a son, James, his heir (and several daughters), but this is an error explained on next page. His immediate successor was his brother, Gregor Mor.

The Latin history of the Alpinian family appears to have ended about the time of Gregor X., 1248.² After Malcolm XIV. the article in the "Baronage" falls unintentionally into misleading errors for several generations. The genealogy is very complicated, but the patient investigations of Mr MacGregor Stirling throw considerable light upon it. The care with which he worked out his researches, and the conclusions to which they led, can be exemplified from his correspondence with the late Sir Evan. In December 1824 Mr MacGregor Stirling had drawn up a genealogical tree, in which Malcolm, No. XIV. of the "Baronage," is shewn succeeded by a son James as above mentioned, and that James, followed by two legitimated sons. But in a letter of the 16th March 1825 he wrote that "Dominus Jacobus MacGregor, 31st January 1557-8," who he and Mr Gregory had imagined to have been "James MacGregor of that Ilk," turned out to be the Dean of Lismore. Again, on the 14th April 1825, Mr MacGregor Stirling wrote—

"The accident of an inaccurate copy of a voucher, dated 1571 instead of 1671, has, in the printed history of the Gregorian race, perplexed the genealogy for more than a century. It is now ascertained that James MacGregor of that Ilk, who entered into a bond of friendship with Lachlan McFingon of Strathardle, was that Laird of MacGregor who had Malcolm Douglas for tutor, and for whose name we were at a loss."¹

Returning to the "Baronage," and passing over the two next erroneous personages, we have this account of Gregor Mor :—

"XIV. Gregor Mor or the Great, second son of John MacGregor of that Ilk, to whom his father gave the lands of Breachd-sliabh, commonly called Brackly, in Glenurchy, with a numerous following of men.² He lived in the reigns of King James III. and IV., and, grieved at the oppression of his family and friends, he raised his men, and, making several successful expeditions against their enemies, recovered possession of a large tract of country called Glen Lochy, the forest of Corrychaick, the lands of Ardeonaig, and several others on the side of Loch Tay, which his descendants enjoyed till the reign of James IV.

"Gregor took to wife Finvola or Flora, daughter to McArthur of Strachur, by a daughter of the family of Argyll, ancestor of the present Colonel Campbell of Strachur.

"By this lady he had four sons and several daughters.

1. Duncan, his heir.
2. Gregor, a captain of great reputation, who, having come to the south country, performed several valiant actions against the English Borderers in conjunction with his cousins the Griersons of Lag.
3. Malcolm, a man of great prudence and valour, famous for his dexterity in all manly exercises, and in great esteem with Alexander, Earl of Mar, at whose request he raised his patrimony from his brother, and acquired the lands of Inverey, with several others in Brea-Mar, where he settled. He married a daughter of Dougal Lamont of Stiolaig (by a daughter of the family of Bute), by whom he had several children; the eldest of whom, Alexander, acquired the lands of Cherry, Killach, Dalcherz, Balachby, &c.

There are several good families, and some hundreds of commoners, of this branch of the MacGregors in Brae-Mar and the adjoining countries to this day; but during the general persecution they lost their lands, and betook themselves to several different names, as Ogilvies, Gordons, &c.³

³ Curious history of this family, by John Gregory *pene*s Mr John Murray. (Extant.)

4. John, who afterwards got the lands of Brackly from his eldest brother.¹

“XV. Duncan, called Ladasach, or “the complete hero,”² succeeded—a man of resolution, much celebrated by the bards. He lived for some time with his uncle Strachur, in the Island of Orann in Glenfalloch, and did him the good service of reducing the Macilvanes, a tribe who possessed some lands of Strachur’s, without any acknowledgment. Thereafter he acquired the lands of Ardchoill³ (which belonged to Strachur), and several others in Breadalbane, besides his former possessions, upon which he gave those of Brackly to his younger brother, John,¹ as before observed. He took to wife Mary,⁴ daughter to the Laird of Ardkinlas, ancestor of Sir James Campbell of Ardkinlas, by a daughter of the family of Argyll, by whom he had two sons :—

1. Gregor, his heir.”

Another son, John, is mentioned on the authority of a charter witnessed by “domino Joanne MacGregor, militi,” but this is a mistake, as the John in question was John MacEwin Vic Allaster of Glenstray, see page 32. Details of the history and tragical end of Duncan and his eldest son will be given farther on. There were other sons :—

“2. Malcolm, who perished with his father and brother.⁵

3. Duncan Oig Laddosoun.⁵

4. Patrick Dow M^cGregor Vic Duncan Laddosach, murdered in Balquhiddy, 4th Oct. 1574, by the Clan Dowilchayr.”

Sir John MacGregor Murray, with the scanty sources of information then in his possession, had not only been led by the wrongly dated voucher into the error of giving a son James as the successor to Malcolm XIV., but supposed this James to have been the father of the Alexander MacGregor who was the leader in the celebrated battle of Glenfruin; whereas that leader was Glenstray, of a different line. Re-

⁴ It is probable that there may have been a confusion of names here, as a Glenstray is known to have married into this family.

⁵ Vide Notice in the Obituary, as given later, and Duncan Oig (Young) Ladossoune (son of Laddeus) is also mentioned in the Records, 1562-63, &c. See Chapter XVI.

turning to Chapter IV., where the entries are given from the Obituary under date 1415, mentioning the deaths of two sons of John Cham (see page 16), there appears some reason to believe that Gregor Aulin, whose line has been traced on as far as Duncan Ladosach and his son, was the elder brother, and the argument sustained by Mr MacGregor Stirling is that Gregor's descendants, eventually Glencarnoch, and through him the present Chief, Sir Malcolm, carry down the representation from the early Chiefs by right of blood as the eldest line.¹

We have now to trace the House of Glenstray, or Clan Dowlagneir, a distinctive name occurring in the Black Book of Taymouth, and supposed to be derived from "Dubh Lag an Iar"—Black Hollow of the West. The authority for the Founder of the House, and for the first succeeding generations, is the repeatedly quoted Obituary, or Chronicle of Fortingal. (See Chapter VIII.)

"I. John dhu M^cEan Cham Vic Gregor, brother of Gregor (Aulin), and mentioned (page 21) as having died at Stromelochane, 1415.

"II. Death of Malcolm, son of John dhu MacGregor, at Glenurquhy, on the 20th April in yhe year 1440; he was buried in the manner formerly mentioned."

There is evidence that he had a brother Allaster (to be noticed farther on).

"III. Death of Patrick MacGregor of Glenstray, at Stronemelochane, on the 24th of May in the year 1440. He was buried at Dysart in the way formerly mentioned.

"IV. Death of John dhu MacGregor of Glenstray, son of Patrick, at Stronemelochane, on the 24th May in the year 1519.

His son predeceased him, and is thus mentioned in the Obituary—

"Death of Malcolm MacGregor, son and heir of John MacGregor of Glenstray, at Glenlyon. He was buried in Dysart, South of the Altar, in a stone coffin, on the 22nd of June 1498.²

On the death of John Dow, in 1519, the representation of this line

¹ Sir John MacGregor Murray recognised Glenstray as the Chief, but supposed him to be a grandson of Malcolm XIV.

² It is remarkable that all of this line continued to be buried at Dysart in Glenurchy.

passed to his heir and successor, John M^cEwin M^cAllaster, his second cousin.¹ Contemporary with Gregor Mor, XIV.

In the Dean of Lismore's Book,² the genealogy of this John dhu M^cGregor of Glenstray is given in old Gaelic,³ with the following translation:—

“ John, son of Patrick, son of Malcom, son of John, the black son of John, son of Gregor, son of John, son of Malcom, son of Duncan the little, son of Duncan from Srulee, son of Gilelan,⁴ son of Hugh of Urchy, son of Kenneth, son of Alpin; and this Kenneth was head King of Scotland, in truth, at that time; and this John is the eleventh man from Kenneth, of whom I spoke. And Duncan the servitor, son of Dougal, son of John the grizzled, wrote this from the books of the genealogists of the kings, and it was done in the year of our Lord one thousand five hundred and twelve.”

The genealogy is here reversed for greater distinctness:—

“ Alpin.

Kenneth.

Hugh of Urchy.

William (see “Baronage,” No. IX.), or Gillefealan.

Duncan a Strwlee (see p. 14); he was probably the second son.

Duncan beg (see same page).

Malcolm (see No. XI. of “Baronage,” and page 11, or, more probably, Malcolm VIII.).

John (not mentioned in “Baronage”).

Gregor do. do.

John (Cham). (Died 1390, page 15.)

John Doef (or dhu). (Died in 1415. Had a brother Gregor, who also died in 1415.)

Malcolm. (Died in 1440 as above. Had a brother Allaster.)

Patrick. (Died May 1440 as above.)

² From the MS. collection made by Sir James MacGregor, Dean of Lismore, in the beginning of the sixteenth century; edited with translation by Revd. Thomas M^cLauchlan, 1862. The Obituary had been previously printed in the “Archeologia Scotica,” vol. iii. (see page 25).

⁴ Mr Skene reads this name as Gillefealan (it seems probable): William in modern Gaelic is Uilleam.

The Bard may be assumed to have had accurate information about the late generations, although he skipped over several ancestors prior to Hugh of Urchy. The Latin MS. followed in the "Baronage," was probably the labour of a monk or ecclesiastic of the name of MacGregor. It has been found, by the scrutiny of sundry ancient chronicles, that the monks sometimes drew on their fertile imaginations; but, although some generations may have been omitted by them also, and the names mixed up, the accounts of the various Chiefs, as related in this MS., were probably founded on old traditions; and thus the two pedigrees embody all that can now be known about the early days of the Clan's heroes. We reach solid and perfectly reliable ground in the Obituary of the Chronicle of Fortingall. On the next page a Genealogical Table of Ian Cham's immediate descendants is given.

As remarked by Mr Skene in a note to the genealogy—

"It is obvious that a number of generations are omitted, not even excepting the ancestor who gave his name to the clan. The omission of generations is by no means an uncommon feature in traditional genealogies."

The circumstance that Malcolm MacGregor of Glenstray, who died in 1440, had a brother, and that his name was Allaster, has been made out from the patronymics of his grandson, given in a genealogy occurring in the Black Book of Taymouth.

We therefore return to the said

II. Allaster, younger brother of Malcolm,¹ and thus younger son of John Dhu M^cEan Cham VicGregor. (See previous page.)

III. Ewine, cousin-german of Patrick of Glenstray, his existence being traced in the same way.

IV. John MacGregor of Glenstray, second cousin and heir to the last of the same name, who died in 1519.

Against this individual, as John Macgregor of Glenstray, a claim was brought by the widow of his predecessor.

¹ The evidence of the connection of John MacGregor of Glensbrae with his predecessor is sufficiently clear to all who have studied Highland genealogies and their patronymics. Finding that John, son of Ewan, son of Alastair, is heir to John, son of Patrick, son of Malcolm, son of John Dhu, the conclusion to be drawn is, that Alastair must also have been a son of John Dhu, and that through him came the claim to the property. Action pursued by Marioune Stewart, relict of Jon M'Gregour of Glenstra, against John M'Gregor, his heir and successor, to content and pay to the said Marioune the fermes and profits of the lands of Glendarnycht, in the Earldom of Argyle, and shire of the same, pertaining to her in conjunct fee, of the terms of Whitsunday and Martinmas 1519, extending to seven bolls of oatmeal, price of the boll 16s.; four bolls of beir, price of the boll 20s.; twelve stone of cheese, price of the stone 40d., one mart, price 40s.; and four wedders, price of the piece 6s. and 8d. The said Marioun, compeared by Robert Leslie, her procurator, and the said John M'Gregor did not compear. The Lords of Council continued the action to the 24th May next to come.”—From the “Acta Dominorum Concila.”

He married a daughter of Sir Colin Campbell of Glenurchy, Knight, by a daughter of Luke Stirling of Keir, Sir Colin's fourth wife.¹ From the Obituary:—

- “1528, April 12th. Death of John MacGregor M'Ewine, Captain of the Clan-Gregor of Glenstray, who died of good memory, at Achallader in Glenurquhay, on Easter Day, the 12th of April, in the year 1528; he was buried in Dysart, as others of his name used to be. May God have care of his soul.”

This family of the Clan Gregor having become connected with the Glenurchay family, the Black Book of Taymouth gives a genealogy of it. According to this the marriage of “Johnne Makewin Vic Allaster M'Gregour with Helene Cambell, dochter to Sir Coline Campbell of Glenurchay, Knight, and widow of Lochbuy,” was not perfectly regular, but it must have been condoned, for the Campbells of Glenurchay afterwards favoured the Glenstray family; and it may have been in consequence of the Campbell support that Glenstray became Captain. With regard to Sir Colin's son-in-law the Black Book has the following notice: ‘The foresaid Johnne was not righteous air to the M'Gregour, bot was principal of the Clandowlagniar.’”²

This remark on John M'Ewin's position is not understood as casting a doubt on his legitimacy, but as implying that he was head of his branch only of the Clan.¹

"Details of the Glenstray Family, from the Black Book of Taymouth, Johne Makewin V'Allaster M'Gregour, in anno . . . ravischet Helene Campbell, dochter to Sir Coline Campbell of Glenurquhay, Knight. This Helene Campbell wes widow and lady of Lochbuy, and scho wes ravischet. The foresaid Johne wes not righteous air to the M'Gregour, bot wes principall of the Clan-Doulagnear.

"This Johne M'Ewin begat upon the foirsaid Helene, Allaster M'Gregour of Glenstray, quha mariet ane dochter of the laird of Ardkinglass, being widdow to M'Nachtan of Dundaraw.

"Allaster Roy M'Gregour succedit to the foirsaid Gregour, his Father, and had no children bot ane dochter. This Allaster Roy M'Gregour wes execute and hangit at the mercat Croce of Edinburgh, and forfaitit in anno 1604.

By the said Helen Campbell, relict of Lochbuy (M'Lean), John MacGregor of Glenstray left three sons:—

1. John, who with his father witnessed a grant by the Earl of Argyle to — Campbell, of the lands of the Phanans, but nothing is known of him beyond this solitary notice.
2. Allaster, who succeeded his father, as is believed.
3. Gregor, who predeceased his father, and whose death is thus recorded in the Obituary:—

“1526, July 31. Death of Gregor, son of John MacGregor, alias M^cEwine M^cAllaster of Glenstray, at the Isle of Loch Rannoch; he was buried in Dysart, in a stone coffin, on the north side of the High Altar of Glenstray, on the last day of July in the year 1526. May his soul rest in peace.”

This Gregor left a son, Allaster, who became ancestor of the MacGregors of Ardlarich,¹ a very important branch of the Clan in Rannoch.²

V. Allaster³ M^cGregor of Glenstray, son of John M^cEwine MacGregor, was formally infeoffed in Glenstray in 1528, which, including Stronmelochan, amounted, as appears from the enfeoffment, to twenty merks old extent. He “mariet ane dochter of (Campbell) the Laird of Ardinglass, being widdow to M^cNachtan of Dundaraw”—B. B. of Taymouth—and left four sons, or more—

1. John, his heir.
2. Gregor Roy, who succeeded his brother.
3. Ewin, Tutor of Glenstray.
4. Allaster Galt (or the Travelled), mentioned in Record as the “Brother to the Laird of MacGregor.” He lived in Culquhirrilan. He had five sons—

1. Allaster.
 2. John Dhu M^cAllaster, in Cannoquhan.
 3. Duncan M^cAllaster Galt.
 4. Patrick M^cAllaster Galt.
 5. Gregor M^cAllaster Galt, executed at Edinburgh, 28th July 1612.
5. Duncan na Glen of Phanean, so styled in Bail Bond, 22nd April 1601, by his nephew, Alexander M^cGregor of Glenstray, and mentioned elsewhere as “Duncan M^cGregor in Glen, Brother to the Laird of M^cGregor.” He had sons—

Chapter VI

THE so-called Chronicle of Fortingall, compiled by James MacGregor, Vicar of Fortingall and Dean of Lismoir, contains a most valuable abstract of the contemporaneous history of the ClanGregor, and therefore it is here given, omitting many entries not connected with the Clan. The Chronicle was continued from 1531 by the Curate of Fortingall. The first portion was published in the original Latin, with a translation by Mr Gregory, in 1831, and advantage of this translation has been taken on the next page, whilst the latter part has been copied from the Black Book of Taymouth, merely translating the few words of Latin.

Translation of Dean MacGregor's Chronicle,¹ by Donald Gregory, Esq.:—

- “ 1092. Death of Malcolm Kenmoir, the elder² King of Scotland, at Alnwick. And Qwiene Margret heir and the deid of hir husband died within thre dais thairefter in the said year. The translation of Queen Margaret was in the year 1092.
- “ 1107. Death of Edgar, King of Scotland, at Dundee. He reigned nine years and three months.
- “ 1124. Death of Alexander I., King of Scotland, in Striweleich. He reigned eighteen years and three months.
- “ 1153. Death of David I., King of Scotland, at Carlisle. He reigned twenty-nine years and twenty days. He died on the 9th of the Kalends of June, and was buried at Dunfermlyne before the great altar.
- “ 1165. Death of Malcolm the younger (IV.), King of Scotland, in Gedwart.³ He reigned twelve years six months and twenty days.
- “ 1213. Death of William, King of Scotland, at Streulyne. He reigned fifty-one years.

¹ In taking down many years ago the old church of Dysart, several stone coffins were found at the north part of the east end of the church, where the M^cGregors appear chiefly to have buried. Several of their old tombstones, much defaced, were likewise discovered, which are still appropriated by such of the clan as bury in the churchyard (1831). Note by Compiler.—Pennant, in his book "A Tour," in 1769 writes :—"The church is seated on a knowl. . . . In the churchyard are several gravestones of great antiquity, with figures of a warrior, each furnished with a spear or two-handed sword ; on some are representations of the chase, on others elegant fretwork, and on one—said to be part of the coffin of a M^cGregor, is a fine running pattern of foliage and flowers, and, excepting the figure, all in good taste." At a meeting of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland in Jan. 1897, Mr Brydale read a paper describing a group of seven carved grave slabs in the churchyard at Dalmally, which is stated to have been the burying-place of the Chiefs of MacGregor from 1390 to 1528. "The Chronicle records the burial of no fewer than twelve of these Chiefs successively in stone coffins at the north side of the east end of the church. When the old church was demolished about 1811, a number of stone coffins and carved grave slabs were found in this position." . . . Of the seven stones now described three are of the same type, showing in a panel the figure of an armed man with sword and spear, and wearing a pointed bascinet and short tunic, the rest of the surface being filled in with foliaceous ornamentation. A fourth is curious as showing this type superimposed on a larger figure obliterated, and having a cross at the top of the stone. Of the other two of this type one is curious from its small size, and the other is much mutilated. The seventh is apparently the front slab of an altar tomb, and bears a finely carved scroll of foliage, but no armed figure. Drawings of all the slabs were exhibited."—Abridged from an account of the meeting in the Oban Times of 23rd Jan. 1897.

Chapter VII

Book of the Dean of Lismore

IN connection with the preceding Obituary, some poems from the Collection known as the Dean of Lismore's Book¹ now follow. They are written in praise of some of the MacGregors, whose deaths are recorded in the Obituary, and they show the traditional Genealogies current in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Some remarks by Dr Joseph Anderson on this subject are interesting :—

“There are three separate Genealogies of MacGregor given by the MacGregor Bards in the collection of Sir James MacGregor Dean of Lismore. The oldest of them is introduced in the matter of fact manner of these old Sennachies. The author of this is M^cGillinduk the man of songs, as if all the world ought to have heard of his fame. He commences the genealogy with Duncan Beg and carries it down to Malcolm whom he styles son of Derval and names his wife as Mary. Malcolm son of Derval may be recognised from the obit in the ‘Chronicle of Fortingall’ as the Malcolm son of John Dhu M^cAin Cham who died in 1440. This Genealogy as he is the last mentioned and is spoken of as in life, was probably composed before that time. Derval his mother is mentioned in the ‘Chronicle of Fortingall’ as Dervogill Nyn Ean V^cLachlan wife of John Dhu MacGregor as dying at Glenurchy in 1424. The second Genealogy written by Duncan MacDugal Moill in the lifetime of John Dhu Macpatrick, Grandson of the Malcom who died in 1519, carries the Genealogy up to Kenneth M^cAlpin. Both are the same up to Duncan Beg, Great-Grandfather of that Gregor who was father to the John MacGregor whose obit is 1390. John Dow M^cPatrick's mother may have been a Grant as the blood of Grant in thy apple-red cheeks and the death of John Grant in 1480 is noticed in the ‘Chronicle.’”

¹ “A Selection of Ancient Gaelic Poetry from a MS. Collection.” Edited, with a Translation and Notes, by the Rev. Thomas M^cLauchlan, and an Introduction and additional Notes by William F. Skene, Esq., 1862. Particulars about the Dean and his family are given in Chapter XIII.

FIONNLADH RUADH AM BARD.

“Fad a taim gun bhuaidh, ’fhaigheal domh is mithich,
 Thainig time thàmhach, as an aoradh dhligheach,
 Is e conair a theighinn, d’ iarraidh slait mhir,
 Gu flath treun nan Gaidheal, far nar fhaighear luchd suail.
 Gu Mac Grigoir dion, is ceann air na sgoilbh,
 Ni bhì neomhìn falamh, dlighear dhomh a mholadh.
 Gu fear is treun coir, an toiseach gach samhradh,

 ’N uair chinneadar a chomhrag ’g a ghairm an cridhe namhaid,

FINLAY THE RED-HAIRED BARD.

"I am a stranger long to success, 'tis time that I should have it,
 'Tis time now to desist, from satire justly due.
 The way that I shall take, to seek a noble branch,
 Is to the Prince of the Gael, where are no worthless guests.
 To MacGregor the brave, head of all the schools;
 He's neither cruel nor sparing, to praise him is our duty.
 To whom courage is a right; when summer time comes round,
 Peace he never knows, he's in the throat of all his fellows
 When men of him do speak, as Gregor of the blows,
 'Tis his delight to drive, flocks and herds before him.
 Of that flock John's¹ the head, the king at lifting cattle.
 I myself will sing, mouth with mouth at daybreak,
 When his sharp-armed men see, MacGregor at the Bealach,
 His way so gently soft, no weight to them their burdens.
 Then when war arises, proclaimed in enemies hearts,
 It is to him they'd gather, clothed in martial dress.
 'Tis of MacGregor's fame, when fighting's left behind,
 To men not to be cruel, his castle full of mirth;
 When victory I had left upon the field of war,
 When of the fight I spoke nought loved my patron more
 Though sad, on the stormy lake, to tell of my grief,
 To have a crew of mariners, is best in battle's day.
 Remember I'll be with thee, MacGregor without stain,
 In face of any foe, long, long's the time.
 Gentle Elizabeth, change thou my state;
 Woman of softest locks, and of the loftiest brow."

THE AUTHOR OF THIS IS DOUGALL MAC GILLE GLAS.

"Bold as a Prince is John in each gathering
 'Twere long to sing his race's glory;
 Of this there is no doubt 'mong men,
 That he is the first of the race of kings,
 Mac Gregor of the bravest deeds,
 Is the boldest chief in any land;
 Between his gold and the Saxon spoil,
 Well may he live in ease and peace.

¹ Supposed to be John dubh MacGregor of Glenstrae, died May 24, 1519.—Obituary.

Choice for courage of the Grecian Gael
Whose meed of praise shall ne'er decay,
Abounding in charity and love,
Known in the lands of the race of kings.
White-toothed falcon of the three glens,
With whom we read the bravest deeds,
The boldest arm 'midst fight of clans,
Best of the chiefs from the race of kings.
When on Mac Phadrick of ruddy cheeks
Wrath in battle's hour awaked,
The men who with him share the fight
Are never safe amidst its blows.
Grandson to Malcolm of bright eyes,
Whom none could leave but felt their loss,
The generous, gentle, shapely youth,
The readiest hand when ought's to do.
The race of Gregor stand round John,
Not as a weak one is their blow ;
The famous race without a fault,
Round him like a fence they stand.
Clan Gregor who show no fear,
Even when with the king they strive,
Though brave Gael may be the foe,
That they count of little weight.
Gael or Saxon are the same,
To these brave men of kingly race,
Sons of Gregor bold in fight,
Bend not before the fiercest foe,
Prince of the host of generous men,
To Gregor of golden bridles, heir,
Pity the men whom you may spoil,
Worse for them who you pursue.
Chief of GlenLyon of the blades,
Shield and benefactor of the Church,
His arm like Oscar's in the fight,
To whom in all things he is like.
Kindness mantles on his red cheek,
Thy praise he justly wins ungrudged,
Benevolence when to men he shows,
Horses and gold he freely gives.

Mac Grigoir an teaghlach ghrinn, ni h-ìoghnadh leinn 'n a chuirt ciar,
 Nì bheil coimeas d' a uchd geal, ach am fear dhe 'n robh an fhiann ;
 Aigesan trì freiceadan fionn,
 braigh a ghille nì facadh riamh,
 Lamh bu mhaith iorghuil an greas, do b' ionmhuinn leis fuileach fiadh Cosmhuil a mhein's mhodh, ris an rìgh 'g a robh an Fhiann, Rì h-agh Mhic Grigoir nan creach, bheir roghadh gach neach am mian ;
 Maith is cumha a rosg gorm, ri Mac Cumhail nan corn fial, Ionann an or fa dhuinn, agus an run diolaidh ciar ;
 Ionann an suiridh 's an sealg, riu 'us Cu ceaird nam Fiann,
 A ta an rath air sliochd nan rìghe, is maith an cliu 'us an ciall ;
 Eineach 'us eangnath 'us iochd, do cheangladh air an sliochd rìgh,
 Fion 'us ceir, agus mel, am miann sin le sealga fhiadh ;
 Fine Eoin is gasda gnìomh, iad mar mhacaibh rìgh na Feinn,
 Agus Eoin mar am Fionn fein,
 'n a cheann air gach daimh a Ge dhurachd leo flaitheas Feinn, do chathaich rì linn na Feijn,
 Is air Mhac Phadruig a ta an rath sharuich se gu maith.
 Mac Grigoir nan dochair a t' ann,
 ceann sochair ceall 'us ciar,
 Taobh seang air am breithbbean,
 o Gleannsrath nam fear fial ;
 Comhrad dhuinn breth le Eoin,
 is nì g' a dheoin do nì,
 A tìodhlacadh each 'us or,
 fa 'n seach mar is coir do rìgh ;

Mac Gregor of the noble race,
No wonder though bards should fill thy court ;
To his white breast there is no match,
But he so famous 'mong the Feinn.
Three fair watches him surround,
Never as captives were his men ;
His arm in battle's struggle strong,
Well did he love to hunt the deer.
In mien and manners he was like
The king who ruled amongst the Feinn.
MacGregor of the spoils, his fortune such
That choicest men do covet it.
Good and gentle is his blue eye,
He's like Mac Cumhail of liberal horn,
Like when giving us his gold,
Like when bestowing gifts on bards,
Like in wooing or in hunt,
To the Cu Caird¹ among the Feinn.
Fortune attends the race of kings,
Their fame and wisdom both are great,
Their bounty, prudence, charity,
Are knit to them, the race of kings ;
Wine, and wax and honey,
These, with the stag hunt their delight.
Famous the actions of John's clan,
Like to the sons of the Fenian king ;
John himself was like to Finn,
First and Chief 'mongst all his men,
Though many sought to have Finn's power.
'Mongst those who fought against the Feinn,
On Patrick's son fortune attends,
His enemies he has overcome.
Mac Gregor who destroys is he Bountiful friend of Church and bards ;
Of handsome form, of women loved,
He of Glenstay of generous men.
Easy 'tis to speak of John
His praise to raise loud in the song,
Giving his horses and his gold,
Just as a king should freely give.

Rìgh neimh, Mhuire oigh, dlìghe mar is doigh mo dhìon,
 Mo bhreith 's a chaithir gun cheilt,
 's a bheil Athair Mhic an Aig Rìgh."

THE AUTHOR OF THIS IS DUNCAN MAC DOUGALL MAOIL.

The history of the secret origin of John Mac Patrick
Why should I conceal it?
What belongs to his race is not feeble,
The bearing of that race we love,
Seldom of a feeble race it is,
Among the Gael of purest fame,
That inquiry of their origin is made,
By the men who read in books
Firm the belief to them and me,
During the evening time so dark
That in the blood of noble kings
Were the rights of true ClanGregor
Now that I'm by thy green dwelling,
Listen John to thy family story.
A root of the very root are we
Of famous kings of noble story.
Know that Patrick was thy Father,
Malcolm father was to Patrick.
Son of Black John, not black his breast,
Him who feasts and chariots owned.
Another John was Black John's father,
Son of Gregor, son of John the lucky.
Three they were of liberal heart,
Three beneficent to the Church.
The father to that learned John,
Was Malcom who his wealth ne'er hid,
Son of Duncan surly and small,
Whose standard never took reproach.
His father was another Duncan,
Son of Gillelan of the ambush,
Noble he was, giving to friends,
Son of the famous Hugh from Urquhay.

 A 'd chinneadh nach crion ri fodhair,

 Da fhichead agus triur righ,

 Tri tuathruidh, tri deasruidh,

 Da choigear choron a chinnidh,

 O Alpain suas is e bhitheas,

 Do cheart sheanchas is e sin,

 Aithris."

Kennan of the pointed spear,
Of Hugh from Urquhay was the father.
From Alpin of stately mien and fierce,
Mighty king of weighty blows.
This is the fourth account that's given
Of thee who art the heir of Patrick.
Remember well thy backbone line,
Down from Alpin, heir of Dougal
Twenty and one besides thyself,
John the black not black in heart.
Thy genealogy leads us truly
To the prosperous Fergus M^cErc.
Of thy race which wastes not like froth,
Six generations wore the crown.
Forty Kings there were and three,
Their blood and origin are known.
Three there were north and three to the south,
After the time of Malcom Kenmore.
Ten of the race did wear the crown,
From the time of Malcom up to Alpin.
From Alpin upwards we do find
Fourteen kings till we reach Fergus.
Such is thy genealogy
To Fergus, son of Erc the prosperous.
How many are there of thy race
Must there have been from thee to Fergus.
Noble the races mix with thy blood,
Such as we now we cannot number.
The Schools would weary with our tale
Numbering the kings from whom thou 'rt sprung.
The blood of Arthur is in thy bosom
Precious is that which fills thy veins ;
The blood of Cuan, the blood of Conn,
Two wise men, glory of the race.
The blood of Grant in thy apple-red cheek,
The blood of Neil the fierce and mighty.
Fierce and gentle, at all times,
Is the story of the royal race.

The Lords have precedence of chiefs,
It has been so from the beginning ;
It is commendable in young men,
That each should have knowledge of this,
The first who was Lord of this land,
Was Duncan beg (little) of the great soul,
He who as a legacy has left,
Their bravery to the ClanGregor.
Duncan, great by many spoils,
Was the blessed father of Malcom ;
Grandfather he was to Princely John,
Him who never broke his pledge.
Gregor, excellent son of Duncan,
Was son to John and was his heir ;
Famous man he was of the country,
From the bright shore of Loch Tullich,
Swarthy John,¹ so pure in speech,
Princely son of John M^cGregor,²
Hunter of the well formed deer,
He like a king aye led the fight,
Malcom of unbending truth,
Know thou John, succeeds his father,
Southwards in fair Glenurchay,
Handsome he was amongst its valleys.
The first place 'mong their ancestors
Is given by the Saxon to ClanGregor,
Of whom were three chiefs loved the hunt,
And were most active in the fight.
In the days of Conn of hundred battles,
I heard something like this,
Of Finn of spears and sharp sword,
Cumha's son of famous deeds,
That of Erin the hunting and lordship
Belonged to Mac Cumhal of long locks,
Patrimony and lordship he had not
Over the lands of the race of the Gaul.
Forest right they had all his life,
From Kerry north to Carn Valair.

But he possessed the old rights,
Which previously were his.
From Hallowmas on to Beltin,
His Feinn had all the rights.
The hunting without molestation.
Was theirs in all these forests.
Many the tributes I cannot tell,
Belonged to Finn and his men,
Tribute in Erin possessed,
By Mac Cumhail from the forests.
A noble forest's right to the Feinn,
On the banks of every stream.
But Malcom's¹ large tributes
Did not belong to Mac Muirn ;
Finn himself would never hunt
Without first asking leave.
The hunting of Scotland, without leave
Belongs, with its spoil, to Malcom.
Constant in the hunt together
Are MacGregor and his fierce men ;
No oftener did the blood-red hounds
Enter the fort of Clan Boisgne.
A fighting band of chieftains
Arose with him in battle's day,
Men whose dress sparkled with gold,
Men who conquered in the fight.
The heads of clans and of huntsmen
In the common fame of his race.
No trial of bravery of skill
Will show weakness in M^cGregor.
Many in his halls are found together,
Men who carried well-sharped swords,
Red gold glittered on their hilts,
The arms of the lion of Loch Awe.
Harmonious musick among harps,
Men with dice-boxes in their hands
Men who leave the game of tables,
Go and lead forth the hounds.

¹ Assumed to be Malcolm, son of John Dhu M^cGregor. He died on the 20th April 1440, and the poem appears to have been written in his lifetime. From the references in the poem, Malcom's mother was Dervogil (ob. 1424), and his wife Mary.

Mac Gregor of red-pointed palms,
Son of Dervail, the Saxon's terror,
No hand like his amidst the fight,
He 'tis that ever victory won,
Liberal he ever was to bards,
Gifts which Mac Lamond knows to earn,
Famous for managing his hounds,
A hand so ready with its gifts.
Mary who stands by his side,
Of noble mind and handsome form,
Poets unite to give her praise,
Her with cheeks as berries red.

Chapter VIII

1513 to 1548

KING JAMES IV. having lost his life at the fatal Field of Flodden, 9th September 1513, the long minority of a child-king again began. Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhay fell with most of the Scottish nobility, and was succeeded in his lands by his son Sir Colin. There does not appear to be any authentic record of the Clan Gregor at Flodden. During the reign of James V., when both Highlands and Lowlands were convulsed with incessant troubles, the Clan was not more conspicuous for feuds than its neighbours.

The following Band of Manrent from the "Black Book of Taymouth," is curious as showing the customs as to receiving foster children :—

"1510. April 29. In the course of 1528 Allaster MacGregor, son and heir of John M^cEwin M^cAllaster, was formally infeoffed in Glenstray (General Register House of Sasines, as quoted by MacGregor Stirling), but at that time he can only have been three years old, because in 1532 the Curate of Fortingall states that "Alexander M^cGregor of Glenstra our Scheiff was bot ane barne of 7 yer that tyme." Thus the provision appointed for the "marriage of M^cGregor son and heir" was evidently a sum to be set aside for the future event.

The country of Rannoch had been inhabited by MacGregors from early days, and confident in what they conceived to be their right of possession and their position as king's tenants, they became undoubtedly thorns in the side of those who had been given charters over their heads. The Clan Menzies² do not appear to have been very exacting, but the Campbells lost no opportunity of endeavouring to sow strife between the Clan Gregor and their neighbours. The following passages are taken, by permission, from the "Red and White Book of Menzies," by D. P. Menzies, F.S.Scot.³

After stating that the left wing of the English was cut to pieces at Flodden by the Clans, including Menzies, MacGregors, & a, it continues :—

"On Campbell of Glenurchy receiving all he could from Sir Robert in connection with his life rent of the lands of Crannoch, which gave him a footing on Loch Tayside, he then, for the purpose of forcing the Menzies to sell these lands, secretly, by misrepresentations and other influences, stirred up the MacGregors and other unsophisticated kindly tenants of the Menzieses to violate the laws of the land, and thereby embroiling Sir Robert into difficulties with the Crown for the acts of his tenants. These lawless men were not all MacGregors, but they were saddled with these crimes by their would be friend Campbell.

". . . Sir Robert 'therefore on giving his son a grant of Rannoch bound him not to let these lands in life rents or long leases. It had been made clear to Sir Robert that the Campbells had in secret made use of the MacGregors to ravish his lands so that he would get disgusted with such a state of affairs, and would therefore let or sell the lands on easy terms to the Campbells. This is quite obvious, as there never was any difference between the Menzies and the MacGregors who were their kindly tenants and kinsmen (?). until the crafty Campbells came as evil spirits among those peaceful Celts.' Sir Robert therefore procured a second obligation from his son William Menzies not to let his lands of Roro¹ in Glenlyon, to the Campbells or the Chief MacGregor.

"Obligation not to set Rorow to Campbells nor the Chief of MacGregor:—² Perth, 22. Feb. 1518. We William Menzies and Jonat Campbell my spouse binds and oblissis vs, and the langer levand of vs tua to ane honourable man Schir Robert Menzeis of that ilk, knyght, that we sal gif na takkis nor set in assedatioun the tuelf merkislands of Rorowis, with the pertinentis liand in the barony of Menzeis and Schirefdom of Perth, quhilkis we haif of the said Sir Robert to nane berand the surname of Campbell, nor to the Chief of the ClanGregor, vnder pain of ane hundreth pundis to be payt to the said Robert for costis, scathis, and expenses. Indorsed The oblygatioun that Rorow sall nocht be set to the Campbells na Scheyff of the ClanGregour.—Charter Room of Castle Menzies."

It is stated in the "Lairds of Glenlyon," by Mr Duncan Campbell, that the second daughter of this Sir Robert Menzies (who died in 1523) married MacGregor of Roro.

"For every theft or violation of the law done by the MacGregors (or by caterans or outlaws) the government held Sir Robert responsible as Lord of Rannoch. He petitioned the government to be relieved of this burden. This he urged in 1530. by 'asking instruments that without some good rule be found for the ClanGregor he may not be to answer for them on his lands, nor be burden for good rule in the same.'—Book of Menzies.

"The MacGregors of Glenstray seem to have been on the best of terms with Sir Alexander Menzies (son and successor to Sir Robert) and for years they held the lands of Archty east and others in Rannoch where they had power from Sir Alexander to sublet these lands to any of the ClanGregor with the exception of Duncan Ladosach.

"Lease by Alexander Menzies of Rannoch to John MacGregor of Glenstray of the twenty merkland of Rannoch 'fra the watter of Aracty est' which had been held by the father of the said John for seven years for the payment of £20 yearly and for the other customary service. The right is given to sublet the lands to any person except 'Duncan M^cGregor M^cPhadrick,³ and his barnis.' Perth, 4. Oct. 1548.—Menzies."

¹ Mention is made of the "Roros and Glenlyoun" in a charter to Sir Robert Menzies, 1510.

Chapter IX

Duncan Ladasach

DUNCAN LADASACH, who the "Baronage"¹ mentions as having acquired the lands of Ardchoill,² seems to have been an object of peculiar terror and aversion to Sir Colin Campbell of Glenurquhay, the 6th Campbell Laird. In the "Black Book of Taymouth" there is a satirical ballad entitled "Duncen Laideus alis Makgregouris Testament," the writer of which is not known, but throughout which the gall of the penman in abuse of the warrior, with whom his Clan was at deadly feud, is virulently displayed.

A passage from an interesting work entitled "The Lairds of Glenlyon"³ may explain the Laird of Glenurquhay's position at this time. Quoting first from the "B.B. of Taymouth" where it is said of

"Colene sext Laird of Glenurquhay" that he "was Laird induring the space of threttie-thre zeiris, in the quhilk tyme he conquesit the few of the kingis landis and Charter-hous landis in Braydalbane, the tackis quhairoff his predecessouris obtenit," the writer continues—

"In addition to this he had acquired the 'superioritie of M^cNab his hail landis.' He was actually possessor of the greater part, and with the exception of Struan's small Barony of Fernay, or Fernan, and a few other small bits of land, was Lord Superior and Bailie of the different Baronies and Lordships of Breadalbane. With the most ample feudal privileges, and though his predecessors had land and manrent in the district for nearly a century, he was still but a stranger in a strange land, in which his footing was but precarious, and the authority granted by the King far from being satisfactorily acknowledged and obeyed. At that time the feudal charter, until the title of the holder was recognised and confirmed by the so-called vassals, according to the old Celtic custom, that is, by acknowledging him as chief, and granting him the calp¹ of chieftainship, was little else than a piece of useless parchment. A landlord in order to have the use and mastery of his possessions, must either conciliate or extirpate the inhabitants. The Laird of Glenurquhay was not in a position to adopt the latter alternative, and he therefore eagerly and skilfully seized upon the former. Breadalbane was at that time inhabited mostly by several old colonies or sections of distant clans, who had come under the auspices of different lord-superiors, to occupy the places of those ancient inhabitants upon whom confiscation and death had fallen on account of their accession to the long sustained, and to Bruce almost fatal, opposition of M^cDougal of Lorn. The inhabitants of Breadalbane were thus made up from five or more separate sources, and except the M^cNabs, a supposed branch of the ClanGregor, none of the sections had a chieftain. This gave the Laird of Glenurquhay the precious opportunity of establishing his judicial authority, and the band of manrent and calp of Ceann-Cinne naturally followed, from men alive to feelings of gratitude, for having been by the aid of the Bailie rescued from oppressors, and confirmed in their rights. Every act of judicial authority added what was both absolutely necessary for the safe exercise of that authority and the gradual vindication of feudal possession, a willing recruit to the standard of the 'justiciar.' It may sound strange to present landlords that, three hundred years ago, a proprietor could exercise no privilege of property till mutual kindness produced a bond of brotherhood between him and his vassals, till a democratic election confirmed the royal charter and the calp of clanship superseded the feudal enfeoffment. No suspicion appears to have crossed the Celtic mind that despicable parchment right to the soil was sufficient to confer the personal pre-eminence which, in the absence of hereditary chiefs, they, even they, with their wild notions of unrestrained freedom, had for the sake of internal union, and for giving edge to defensive or offensive policy, found it at all times requisite to support, but which as uniformly they had insisted upon creating for themselves, through means of a rude election."

The preceding able description of the then state of matters will best explain the following bonds of "Manrent," which are to be found in the "Black Book of Taymouth," corresponding with this period:—

"The second day of Junii anno domini 1547 zeris at the castell of Glenurquhay Donald M^cGillekeyr, Fynla M^cGillekeyr his son, Duncan M^cGillekeyr and Neill M^cCoull V^cIllekeyr, Mylcallum M^cCoull V^cIllekeyr, Finlay M^cAne V^cKyndlo, Notwithstanding this band with Glenurquhay, Alexander M^cPatrick V^cCondoqhuy seems to have acted on his own account in some encounter as shown by the following, found in the "Chartulary":—

"1550, October 31st. 'Gregour Dougalsoune' Pledge for 'Alexander Oure (dun or sallow) M^cPatrick M^cGregor,' and Nicol M^cKintaylzeor for art and part of the slaughter of the late John M^cDonald Bayne. Not appearing fugitated.—Record of Justiciary."

In the preface to the "Black Book of Taymouth," Mr Cosmo Innes gives an indictment which shows that Duncan Ladosach resented either this slaughter, or Allaster Our's defection to an adopted Chief.

"On the 26th of November 1551, 'The Queen's advocate set forth that Duncan Laudes and Gregour his sone recently, namely opoun Sounday the 22nd day of November instant at sex hours at even under silence of nycht, be way of hamesukin, cam to the hous of Alaster owir, alias M^cGregoure, servand to Coline Campbell of Glenurquhay of the lands of Moreis and be force tuke him furth of his said hous, and be way of murthure straik him with whingearis and crewellie slew him and spulzeit and tuke fra him his purs, and in it the soume of fourty poundis incontinent thireftir past to the landis of Killing to the hous of ane pure man callit Johnne M^cBayne Pipare, and thair assegit the said hous and brak the durris thairof and be force tuke the said Johne furth of the samyn, and straik his heid fra his body and crewellie slew him and gaif him divers uther straikis with whingearis in his body.'"

Duncan Ladosach and his son were afterwards outlawed and put to the horn.¹ Sir Colin Campbell engaged certain persons to pursue the said Duncan; in this case, as in many others, the Laird of Glenurchy having recourse to strangers and not to his own Clan.

It is impossible to fathom the reasons which led Sir Colin, the following year, to reconcile himself to M^cGregor.

"Be it kend to all men—Me Colyne Campbell of Glenurquhay grants me to have ressavit Duncane M^cGregour and Gregour his sone into my menteinance in all thir just actionis in so far as I may of law, and gude conscience. and atour to have forgevine the saidis Duncane and Gregour thair sarvandis complices and part takers the zeil of luf and gude conscience moving me to the samyn, all manner of actionis and faltis thay ony of them hes committit to me providing alwais that the saidis Duncane and Gregour fulfill thair band and manrent maid to me and my airis in all pointis. COLYN CAMPBELL of Glenurquhay.

This letter of maintenance is the more remarkable because, within a month afterwards, Sir Colin succeeded (by treachery, it is said) in getting both his recently-accepted friends into his power, and slaughtering them.

The following tradition is told in the "Lairds of Glenlyon"¹ as a legend, which may possibly explain Glenurchay's temporary reconciliation with Duncan Ladosach :—

"MacGregor of Dunan, in Rannoch, had committed great herships on the lands of the Campbells in every direction, and particularly on those of Campbell of Glenurchay. The latter did all in his power to take him dead or alive; but M^cGregor, notwithstanding, not only eluded his enemy, but continued to commit greater depredations. At last Glenurchay offered terms of amity and peace, and proposed a conference at the newly-built Castle of Balloch (Taymouth), with a certain number of friends on both sides, to settle disputes, and ratify the relations of friendship into which the parties were about to enter. Glenurchay did all this deceitfully, thinking thus to capture M^cGregor and his principal followers when off their guard. M^cGregor, not suspecting the snare, set off for Balloch at the time proposed, accompanied by the number of men agreed upon. On the top of Drummond, the hill overlooking the castle and meadows of Taymouth, they encountered an old man, who, on bended knees, before a huge, grey stone, appeared to be repeating his orisons in a state of great perturbation. Struck with a thing so unusual, M^cGregor, drawing near, discovered the old man was repeating the prayers for the dead, with which ever and anon the following sentence mixed: 'To thee, grey stone, I tell it, but when the black bull's head appears, M^cGregor's sword can hardly save the owner's fated head. Deep the dungeon, sharp the axe—and short the shrift.' M^cGregor saw at once the toils were set for him, and that the old man had taken this round-about way of apprising him of the vile conspiracy, for fear of the laird, and in consequence of being sworn to secrecy. He proceeded on his way, however. Glenurchay received him with the most cordial appearance of kindness. Dinner was laid for them in the great hall of the Castle, each Campbell having a M^cGregor on his right hand—a circumstance giving the latter a very decided advantage in the melée which followed. The introduction of the black bull's head, and a simultaneous clatter of armed men in an adjoining chamber, put the M^cGregors into an attitude of defence. Snatching the dagger stuck in the table before him, which a few moments previous he had used in cutting his meat, M^cGregor held its point within an inch of the heart of Glenurchay, while with the other hand he compressed his throat. His men following promptly the example of the leader . . . the M^cGregors carried off captive the Baron and some of his principal retainers, the armed vassals, at the earnest request of the Baron himself, whose life the least attempt on their part to rescue him would endanger, offering no resistance. M^cGregor crossed by the boat at Kenmore, dragged his captive to the top of Drummond, and there and then forced Glenurchay to subscribe an ample pardon and remission for all past injuries, and a promise of friendship for the future."

The legend is characteristic of the times, but although the writer suggests that the hero may have been Duncan Ladosach, it would hardly have been possible at his supposed advanced age.

The "Baronage" gives the following narrative :—

"Some disputes having occurred between Gregor, eldest son of Duncan, and Doncha Dubh a Churic (this is a mistake, it was his father, Colin), ancestor of a great family in the neighbourhood, about some marches, a friendly meeting was appointed to be held at Killin for adjusting those differences; but Doncha Dubh (Colin) in the meantime having hired no less than eight assassins, they were concealed in a closet off the room, where the meeting was held; from which upon a certain signal they rushed out upon the too credulous and unguarded Gregor, however he made shift to get out of the house, and jumping into a deep pool of the water of Lochy which ran close by, he dragged several of the assassins after him, but from the number of stabs he had received from their dirks, and the loss of blood in swimming, he was so weak when he got to the opposite bank, that the ruffians easily finished his life. But not yet satisfied with this cruelty, Gregor's horse was sent as a token to his father, and though it is said he dreaded some evil, he went, and was also murdered in the venerable 100th year of his age. Several mournful songs made on this occasion are still preserved. At this time Doncha Dubh seized upon the whole estates of this family which with some interruptions, his posterity enjoyed ever since."

Mr MacGregor Stirling in the "Chartulary," supposes this event to have taken place in 1559-60 or 61; but by the following entry in the Obituary of the "Chronical of Fortingal," continued by the curate,¹ the date of their deaths is shown clearly to have been in the month of June 1552.

"1552. Interfectio et decapitio Duncani M^cGregor et filiorum eius vidilicet Gregorii et Malcolmi Roy per Colinum Campbell de Glenwrqhay et per Duncaniim Roy Campbell de Glenlyon et Alexandrum Menzheis de Rannoch cum suis com-plicibus, quo die Joannes Gour M^cDuncan V^cAlexandrum Kayr fuit interfectus per Alexandrum Menzies de apud in mense Junii videlicet xvi anno Domini ave M.V. Lij.

The Black Book has a memorandum in regard to this Sir Colin :—

“He was ane greit justiciar all his time, throcht the quhilk he susteinitt thee deidlie feid of the Clangregour ane lang space. and besydis that he causit excutt to the death, mony notable lymnaris, he beheidit the Laird of M^cGregour himself at Kenmoir in presence of the Erle of Atholl the justice clerk and sundrie other nobillmen.”

It is probable that it was to Duncan Ladosach that the compliment of personal decapitation was paid by Sir Colin out of his “zeil of luf.” As will be noticed later, Duncan Ladosach was undoubtedly much feared and detested by his enemies, and was turbulent and reckless of shedding blood in his quarrels. In that respect he was no worse than his neighbours. Not till the publication of the “Black Book of Taymouth” was his career looked upon as blamable, and those who enjoyed the venom of the scurrilous doggerel about him adopted its views. If Duncan Ladosach openly slew, perhaps, several men, Sir Colin, his executioner, compassed the death of many more.

In farther illustration of this dire event, so full of interest to the descendants of Duncan Ladosach, the following may be related, given by Mr MacGregor Stirling as a traditional account gathered from “an aged native of Glendochart”¹ :—

“Glenurchay, having some disputes with Gregor, son and heir of the aged MacGregor, about some marches (it is supposed in reference to the properties of Ardchoille Easter and Wester), proposed a friendly conference for adjusting these. The parties therefore met at the village of Kincauser, on the river Lochy, and in the near neighbourhood of Glenurquhay’s seat, Finlarig; when Sir Colin caused some armed men, whom he had concealed, to rush suddenly upon Gregor. These, having overpowered their single opponent (for he had no attendant), proceeded towards his and his father’s residence, Ardchoille Wester, and getting the old Chief in their power, killed him on the spot. The son was reserved for a more publick and mortifying triumph at Kenmore, whither he was dragged all wounded and bleeding, and there, in the presence of several noblemen, beheaded.”

This version makes the son survive the father. It seems probable

however, that the earlier tradition may have been the more correct, the father being reserved for the solemn execution.¹

It has been supposed by Mr MacGregor Stirling and others that Gregor younger of Ardchoille was identical with Gregor Roy, named "Bassen Gheal" ("Red Gregor of the White Palm or Hand"), celebrated in a mournful Gaelic song, but this song, which is supposed to have been composed by a lady of the Campbell race lamenting the death of her beloved Gregor, must apply to Gregor Roy of the Glenstray line, beheaded in 1570, whose wife was a Campbell, instead of young Ardchoille. This will be shown farther on.

Gregor XVI., eldest son of Duncan Ladosach, according to the "Baronage," married Isabel, daughter of Cameron of Stronhead, and left two sons:—

1. Duncan, who succeeded him, and who, after his father's death, was sent to Lochaber, whence he was called Duncan Lochaber or Abarach, as afterwards appears.

2. Patrick, brought up in Athole, and thence known as Parig Adholach or Aulich, "of whom the Drummonds, alias MacGregors, of the Bows, and many other tribes."

Daughter, More (probably Mairie, Mary), married to a MacGregor.

Patrick Adholadh was executed in Edinburgh with Glenstray, February 1604. He left five sons, frequently mentioned in the Register of Privy Council, i.e.—

¹ In the "Lairds and Lands of Loch Tay Side," by John Christie, published in 1892, it is stated that Duncan Ladosach and his sons, Gregor and Malcolm Roy, were executed at Finlarig. This is quite possible, as the place of their deaths is not mentioned in the "Black Book of Taymouth."

² Patrick "Beg" and "Callum Baine," another son, slain in skirmish at Leny, 1626; as also Donald, son of the above Duncan.

Chapter X

Genealogical

TAKING a retrospective view of the notices of the Clan during the reigns of James IV. and V., and up to the tragic deaths of Duncan Ladosach and his son Gregor in 1552, it may be observed that mention is repeatedly made in 1503-1506 of "MacGregor," a style which it is well known pertained always to the Chief of a Clan. At this period he appears to have lived in the neighbourhood of Balquhidder, and had rights of forestry and facilities for the pursuit of deer, which James IV. countenanced. It is not possible to affirm with certainty who was at that time the Chief. Following the "Baronage" in point of chronology, it may have been Malcolm Nr XIV., or possibly his brother, Gregor, his next heir.

Mr MacGregor Stirling, in one of his MS. papers, gives the following note:—

"Inchcalloun (see entry, 1st Sept. 1506, regarding the king having been there) was the residence of Gregor Mor, formerly (during his elder brother's lifetime) styled of Brackly, and now styled 'Makgregour.'

"Patrick MacGregor died at Auchinchallane, '9th July 1518, and was buried in Dysart in Glenurchy (Obituary). This was Gregor Mor's youngest brother,¹ the place of whose death shows that Inchcalloun was still in MacGregor's possession. Gregor Mor, indeed, had most probably been succeeded by his eldest son at this date, 1518."

The additional note rests, perhaps, on firmer grounds:—

"Inchcalloun, or Auchinchalloun,² as it was also called, was soon after, along with Brackly (in Glenurchy), held by a descendant of a younger son of Gregor Mor, as a feu under the Campbells of Glenurquhay, and continued to be held by this line till some time after the beginning of the last century."³

² From the entry in the Obituary, Auchinchall is shown to have been in Glenurchay, therefore cannot well have been identical with Inchcalloun, mentioned in King James IV.'s visit to Balquhidder.

³ A very early parchment regarding the lands of Auchinchallane, and papers connected with

There is, however, reason to believe that Malcolm XIV. of the "Baronage" survived till about the year 1525-6. The history of the murder of Macintosh in 1524-5, and the help given in the capture of the murderers by the deceased's brother-in-law, "Dominus MacGregor,"¹ as quoted from the "Chartulary," from a private MS. at Moy Hall, may connect this date with the said Malcolm, who the "Baronage" states to have married the sister of Macintosh.

Up to this period we find Johnne M^cGregour of Glenstray still called by that territorial designation (see an entry as to "Duncan Gromach's Guids," in 1527). After his death, 12th April 1528, and already previous to that date—i.e., in 1527—his cousin, and eventual successor, John Makewin Makalester, is styled Captain of the Clan Gregour. The circumstances which led to the elevation of John Makewin to this important office are unknown. The office became hereditary in the family of Glenstray for at least six generations. If the representative by right of blood of the eldest line, why was he styled Captain?² It has been already remarked that possibly the line of Gregor Aulin was the eldest, and of that line Gregor Mor, his son Duncan Ladasach, and grandson Gregor, were men such as the Clan would have been proud to follow. It has already been observed, chapter v. p. 48, that Sir John MacGregor Murray believed Glenstray, the leader at Glenfruin, to have been the Chief.

The Campbells of Glenurquhay at this time strongly supported the Glenstray family, but that circumstance would not have recommended them to the rest of the Clan.

In the Obituary occur these notices:—

"1518. July 19. Death of Duncan MacGregor, Captain of the Castle of Glenurquhay; he was buried in Dysart.

"1523. August 12th. Death of a venerable man, Sir Robert Menzies, Kt. He was buried in the church of Weyme.

the sale of it subsequently to the Campbells has found its way into the hands of a private collector, who is understood to be averse to communicating it to this work.

¹ So styled by the Macintosh Historian, probably as a mere recognition of his place of influence in the Clan.

² The Captain in this instance may occasionally have been styled MacGregor, but in the history of Highland Clans the actual Chief rarely was styled Captain.

- "1523. August 12. Death of Sir Colin Campbell Kt., Laird of Glenurquhay, at the Castle of Glenurquhay. he was buried in the Chapel of Finlarig.
- "1524. November 9. Death of Neill son of Duncan Macgregor, in Glenurquhay, at the Castle of Glenurquhay.
- "1529. October 9. Death of an honourable man, Colin Campbell, Earl of Argyle, Lord Campbell and Lorn who died at Inverary, and was buried at Kilmun."

The following "Tak" in connection with the keeping of the Castle of Glenurquhay is interesting. It occurs in the "Black Book of Taymouth":—

- "1550. Tak of Kincraikin and utheris set to Johne M^cConoquhy V^cGregour. Shortly after the death of the English Sovereign Henry VIII. in 1546, an attempt was made on the part of the English to compel a marriage between the young King Edward VI. and our Queen Mary, an alliance which was resisted by the patriotic party in Scotland, because of the policy pursued by the English Kings, of trying to subjugate Scotland. The Duke of Somerset led an army over the Border in August 1547, to attain the object desired by force of arms. The Earl of Arran in this moment of peril “Sent the Fiery Cross throughout the country—a warlike symbol of Celtic origin, constructed of two slender rods of hazel formed into the shape of a cross, the extremities seared in the fire and extinguished when red and blazing, in the blood of a goat slain for the occasion. From this slight description it is evident that the custom may be traced back to Pagan times and it is certain, that throughout the highland districts of the country, it’s summons wherever it was carried was regarded with awe, and obeyed without hesitation. Previous to this we do not hear of it’s being adopted in the lowlands; but on the present emergency, being fastened to the point of a spear, it was transmitted by the heralds and poursuivants throughout every part of the realm ; from town to town, from village to village, from hamlet to hamlet, the ensanguined symbol flew with astonishing rapidity, and such was its effect, that in a wonderfully short space of time an army of thirty-six thousand men assembled near Musselborough.”¹

But through the fortunes of war this gallant army sustained a severe defeat in the battle of Pinkie, 10th September 1547, followed by the return of the English Protector to England soon afterwards, to attend to matters nearer home, and eventually in August 1548 the young Queen Mary, then in her sixth year, was conveyed to the Court of France, and affianced to the Dauphin, afterwards Francis II. of France. Reinforcements having been sent from France and the invaders repulsed, peace with England was at last concluded in April 1550.²

The “Chartulary” has the following extract :—

“1547. September 10th. Order of the Scottish Army at the Battle of Pinkie ‘To witt the Erl of Angus in the vanguard withe ten thousand mene in guid ordour. The Erl of Huntlie in the rereaward witht tuell thousand men of the north pairts of Scotland. The governour himself in the greyt staill oist and withe him all the hail gentilmene of Louthien, Fyf, Angus, Strathern, Stirlingschyr, and the hail borrowis of Scotland to the number of tuentie thowsand mene and upon the richt hand and wing the Erl of Argyll and all the wast hilandmene of Scotland and on the left hand Maklain and Makriggour with all the Illsmene of Scotland.’ M.S. of Pitscottie’s Chronicles in the Library of Innerpaffray of date 23. Mr MacGregor Stirling has the following remarks in the “Chartulary” :—

“In connection with the military history of M^cGregour’ in 1544 and 1547. it is impossible to overlook the circumstance that whatever ‘Slogan’ was used by the Glenstrays during the long period of their Captaincy, originally elective, and ultimately by prescription hereditary (for it lasted from 1552 down to the death of Kilmannan about 1706) the more accepted Slogan of ClanGregor is derived from the estate or ‘roume’ of M^cGregoure ‘Ardchoill.’ That the Glenstrays used a different Slogan is presumable from the very nature of the case. Nor does it seem irrelevant to mention that James Pont a Herald contemporary with the Captaincy of the Glenstrays, and whose Manuscript preserved in the Lyon Office of Scotland is dated 1600, gives the armorial Bearing of MacGregor without supporters and states the motto as being 'Bad Giubhas' which is being interpreted 'Clump of Firs.'¹ In the atchievement of 'MacGregoure' from the Lislebourg M.S. in the British Museum date 1589² there is no motto; a circumstance leading to the inference, that the Slogan of Ardchoill had been first used in 1544 for the obvious reason already stated that there had been previously no established Slogan; and that the Slogan alluding to the Clump of Firs had been substituted by those who did not chuse to adopt the other. It is further remarkable that the Arms of M^cGregor of Stucknary, the penult representative of the Elective Captains of the Glenstray line, as exhibited on his tombstone in the Island of Inch Cailleoch in Loch Lomond, want supporters; a presumption amongst many others that the Glenstrays did not affect to possess the right of Blood as Representative of M^cGregoure of Old."

An unfinished MS., by the same writer, may also here be quoted:—

"Duncan Ladosach was during the lifetime of his father or elder brother, styled of Ardchoille a small estate in Glendochart which he had obtained from a near kinsman of another Clan³ for military service, and which, from being M^cGregor's seat during two armed expeditions and the earliest which the Clan made in defence of the Crown, under Duncan's son and heir, became it's war cry, and is still a scroll in MacGregor's Armorial Bearing. As the Gregorian Race had now by the severity of the Stewart Dynasty on the one hand, and by it's bounty to the other families on the other, become in comparison of their former state, landless; so although the Lineal Chief of a Family that existed towards seven centuries, and was originally royal, must have been tacitly acknowledged, yet from the absence of the grand link of Superior and vassal on Land property, subordination to the Chief had been much relaxed. We shall in the sequel find that the conscious tie of blood had overcome generally the policy of quiet settlement among strangers; that the ClanGregor had in a turbulent state of society preferred a predatory warfare under an elective Captain, to the obscure industry prescribed by a government, unjust in the first instance and tyrannical in the second. We shall find that ClanGregor's subsequent efforts to defend the Crown at the expense of it's best blood, were but inadequately rewarded and that when the person possessed of the largest portion of it's Chief's ancient territory, had by the slaughter of Ardchoille Elder and by the publick decapitation of Ardchoille younger, and by the dispersion of the sons of the latter (which deprived the Clan of a lineal Chief), it rallied under a

Captain who by his armed excursions for the recovery of the ancient territory (which by a plausible fiction was held to be the right of the Chief whether by blood or election) drew down upon his followers the utmost vengeance of a government trembling for it's own existence. He was himself put death in the cause and became the first of a line of hereditary Captains under whom the Clan (now most unruly it must be owned) experienced from the Government the greatest severities, in an attempt to root out the names Gregour and M^cGregour, and to abolish them in all time coming under pain of death. We shall have occasion to witness a general though fruitless revolt of the now nameless Clan for the purpose of bursting the bands of their political death, and those bands which the 'Secreit Council' had imposed, rivetted by the Act of Parliament. The next important scene will display the nameless Clan stepping forth in defence of that Throne, whence had emanated the decree for annihilating it, and which was now menaced with annihilation, the Clan earning a reward, (which on the re-establishment of the Throne, it actually received), in the repeal of the obnoxious decrees."¹

From the "Red and White Book of Menzies":—

"Letter by Mary of Guise Queen Regent of Scotland exempting Alexander Menzeis of that Ilk from finding caution for MacGregors his tenants in Rannoch for seven years—

"1559. Feb. 7. Regina. We understanding that it is not within the power of Alexander Menzies of that Ilk to ansuer for the gud reule of the Clan-Gregoure inhabitantis of the Rannoch and that our chozing the Erle of Ergyle and Coline Campbell of Glenurquhay hes the seruice of that clann and that thai will do thare deligens to caus gud reule kept be the said clann and for dieuers other resonable causis and considerationis moving vs, grantis an gevis licence to the said Alexander to set in tak and assedatioun all and haill his tuentie pund land of Rannock liand within the sherefdome of Perth, to the auld tenentis and inhabitantis thair of of the Clan Gregour for the space of seven yeris; and will and grantis that he nor his airis sall nocht be haldyn to our derrest dochter, nor us, to ansuer for thair gud reule during the said sevin yeris, nor to enter them to our lawes, our justice airis nor justice courtis for thair demeritis, notwithstanding the general band maid be the lordis and landit men of the said S- our said derrest dochter and us thereupon &c. This was a kind and gracious concession, and might have conduced to peace under more favourable circumstances.

Chapter XI

NOTICES of some of the other branches of the Clan have now to be given, as they henceforward become more prominent in the general history.

The family of Grierson of Lag, following the account given in the "Baronage," trace their descent from Malcolm (XI.) the Lame Lord (see page 20). It is supposed that they branched off the end of the 14th century, and probably before the death of Ian Cam, who died in 1390. Their immediate ancestor Gilbert, Laird of Ard and Lag, took the name of Grierson in accordance with charters from George Dunbar, Earl of March, of the Netherholme of Dalgarnoch, to him and his heirs male, to be called by the surname of Grierson, before 1400; and another charter, dated at Dunbar 1400, of the lands of Airdes & a lying in the barony of Tyberis and shire of Dumfries, to the said Gilbert for his many good deeds done to the said Earl. The lands of Lag were conveyed by his cousin Henry Sinclair, 2nd Earl of Orkney, by charter dated 6th December 1408. Confirmation of lands of Garryhorn and Sandokhill dated 17th May 1410. Charter from Archibald Earl of Douglas to Gilbert Grierson his armour-bearer of the lands of Drumjoan, confirmed by his Relict the Princess Margaret, Duchess of Touraine, dated 9th April 1425. Lag Castle was built circa 1460.¹ It is averred that there is no legal proof connecting the Gilbert Grierson of the Charters with MacGregor ancestry.² Granting that the required link is missing, yet most Highlanders will accept the tradition.

MacGregor of Ardinconnell was one of the oldest offshoots of the Clan, and this branch must be noticed as most involved in subsequent disputes with Colquhoun of Luss. Its earliest recorded existence was in 1429, as in a deed of Resignation by John MacRoger of "Gleane Mackerne (Mackurn)

“The first trace of that enmity between the MacGregors and the Colquhouns, which at length became so inveterate, to be found in the Luss family writs, occurs in a document dated in the year 1541. So far back as the year 1527, one of the Macgregor clan, Patrick Macgregor of Laggarie, had despoiled the father of the then Laird of Luss of a considerable number of oxen and cows. To obtain redress for this theft committed on his father’s property, John Colquhoun of Luss summoned him on 27 Dec. 1540, to appear before the Lords of the Privy Council, to hear their decret, ordaining him, in terms of the summons, to restore to the pursuer eight oxen and twelve milk cows, or the price of them with the profits of the same since the year 1527, when he had stolen them from the lands of Strone, in Glenfruin. And on 30th May 1541, Patrick Macgregor of Laggarie was at the instance of John Colquhoun of Luss inhibited from selling any of his lands or heritages until he had satisfied John for the spoil which he had reft from him.

Feud between MacGregors and Colquhouns 113

These proceedings we may not be entitled to consider as evidence of the existence of a formed feud between the MacGregors and the Colquhouns; but they are symptomatic of growing bad feelings between them, and they explain some of the causes which contributed to produce and to intensify the hatred which afterwards proved so disastrous to both."

MacGregor of Roro, a very ancient house, from whence sprang also Leragan, Dunan, Balhaldies, &a., falls to be taken next.

The first authentic notices are to be found in the "Obituary of Forthingal,"¹ 1477. Death of Duncan Beg MacGregor at Roro. There must have been another previous Duncan, probably his father, because there is a notice in 1491 of the death of John Duncanson. Later, in 1503, Gregor Duncanbegson dies at Morinch and Gregor Duncanson, in 1515, at Roro.

The "Baronage" and the Roro traditions state that the founder of the family was Gregor, fourth son of Gregor Aulin, who is believed to be identical with Gregor M^cAne Cham, whose death is recorded in the Obituary in 1415. Another generation is required between Gregor Aulin and Gregor who died at Roro in 1515, and it is clear that the name of the father of the latter was Duncan. It seems, therefore, most probable that the first of the Roro House was grandson of Gregor Aulin instead of his son.

The following is from a MS. Memoir formerly in the possession of the late Colonel Hugh MacGregor of the 63rd Regiment, himself a descendant of the Leragan Family, and thus from Roro. Several copies of this Memoir are extant, and it is probable that it embodied all the oral tradition that Colonel Hugh could collect:—

"I. Gregor MacGregor 4th son (more probably Grandson) of Gregor Aulin, and (more probably Great) Grandson of MacGregor of Glenurchy, got possession of Roro (Ruairidh) in Glenlyon, from his father, about the year 1390. which property remained in the possession of his family by right of occupancy, feu, or wadset, until the 1st of April 1760. Gregor was married to his cousin, by whom he had eleven sons and several daughters, he was succeeded by his eldest son.

"II. John MacGregor who fought the M^cKays in Glenlyon with such personal courage and success as acquired him the proud distinction of 'Ian dubh-nan-Lann' 'Black John of the spears.'² He and the Laird of Garth afterwards fought the powerful Chief of the M^cIvers at Laggan-a-Chatha, and having obtained a complete victory, they shared their lands between them, by which John was enabled to take possession of Camban Castle,¹ where he resided for many years. He married Margaret, daughter to Luke Stirling of Keir and widow of Campbell of Glenurchy, by whom he had six sons, and a daughter, but all of these having died before himself he left the greater part of his lands to a son of his wife by her former Husband. The remaining part he left to his brother Duncan with the superiority of the whole, by which he was enabled to raise the men of Glenlyon, in time of war, by a tune of the bagpipe, a privilege, which in those days was considered a greater honour, than the possession of lands. He died aged ninety nine years."

Mention is made in the book of the "Stirlings of Keir" that Lukas of Strevelyn, the first acquirer of Keir, who died in 1452, had one daughter, Margaret, married to Sir Colin Campbell, but nothing is said of a second marriage.

Here follows from Colonel Hugh MacGregor's narrative the traditional account of how Ian-dubh-nan-Lann disposed of his lands to his step-son :—

"Ian Dubh was proprietor of the whole north side of Glenlyon, as well as of Roro, and resided much in the vicinity of the Kirkton of Fortingall, where the ruins of Baile-mor mhic-Gregair, is still pointed out on the east side of the Burn called Aldour below the publick road.

"He is said to have had six sons and a stepson, whose name was Campbell. It seems that while he meditated on getting his right to the lands which he possessed confirmed by a Charter, he had employed his stepson who was considerably older than any of his own sons to get it executed for him. It was no easy matter in those days. Before setting out upon his important embassy Campbell obtained his stepfather's permission to insert his own name in the Deed, as next heir, failing that of MacGregor. John calculating on the improbability of all his six sons dying without heirs, unhesitatingly gave Campbell his full consent to insert his own name as required. Owing to what fatality is not known the said John and his sons died without heirs. The last of the sons while hunting in the Braes of Glenlyon was overnight at a hunting seat called Lub-Sheas-Garnich, where he lay upon a bed of rushes covered with his plaid, and it is said that whilst turning over upon his bed, a stump of rushes penetrated into his stomach, and killed him on the spot. In consequence of which his maternal Brother Campbell succeeded to the whole north side of Glenlyon which his family have enjoyed ever since."¹

A very picturesque account of the same tradition is given in "The Lairds of Glenlyon." The writer gives the date as the end of the reign of David Bruce, and in regard to Ian dubh's marriage says:—

"From some domestic feud in the family of the Knight of Loch Awe his widowed daughter-in-law and her infant son, were forced to abandon their native Halls. and flee for refuge to Glenlyon. Black John² married the widow, and by her had a family of seven sons. The young Campbell his 'dalta' was carefully nurtured."

A tale is next told of a victory over the Chisholm who had made a raid into Glenlyon, and a relation of the circumstances under which the "dalta" succeeded to the lands, which agrees with the foregoing, continuing afterwards—

"The name of the first laird of the family of Campbell was Archibald. We have reason to believe he was not John Dubh's dalta, but the dalta's heir He lived during the first part of the 16th century. He was a wise man and fully conciliated the people to whose rule he had succeeded. The M^cGregors of Roro, who appear in some way to have been closely connected with the family of Ian Dubh did not dispute his rights, they received him as the heir of the Chieftain, a kindness afterwards well repaid by the Campbells of Glenlyon."

"I I I. Duncan MacGregor of Roro, likewise styled Baron of Glenduibhe now Glenlyon, Brother of Ian-dubh-nan-Lann' He married Elisabeth daughter to the Laird of M^cNaughton of Dun-da-ramh, by whom he had seven sons all of whom were married and had children. and several daughters."

Another traditional account appears among Sir John MacGregor Murray's papers, which at all events gives an interesting view of the adventures of the time.

"Traditional notes taken down 15. October 1814. from the recital of John MacGregor from Ruadhsruthmore:—

² In another part of the work Mr Campbell assumes this Ian dubh to have been identical with a John of Lorn, a M^cDougall, and disputes his having been a MacGregor. His identity seems scarcely susceptible of proof.

"The first¹ person of the name of MacGregor who settled in Ruora was John the Tanister, or second son of MacGregor of Breachdsliabh who was a very handsome man. A daughter of MacNaughtan of Strath Tay fell in love with him.

"Macnaughtan is said to have possessed at a remote period the tract of country between the Cross of MacDuff near Perth and Tigh an Druim, excepting some properties which held of him, of which that of MacNab of MacNab is said to have been one.

"MacNaughtan had seven Farms in Glenlyon which he used as grazings in summer. When the young lady declared her partiality for John MacGregor he told her that he had not the means of supporting a Family as he was not his father's eldest son. In consequence of this remark the Lady proposed that they should take possession of the said lands in Glenlyon which her father used for rearing cattle. They were privately married and proceeded to Glenlyon and settled at Ruarumore one of the said farms. MacNaughtan was highly offended and vowed that he would put his son-in-law to death.

"In the mean time Robert the Bruce came to that country and in consequence of the Battle of Dalrigh MacNaughtan and MacNab lost their Lands. MacNaughtan took refuge at Dundrave near Inverary where he built a place of strength. After the lapse of some years he determined to fulfil his vow against his son-in-law.

"In the interim the son-in-law conciliated the Inhabitants of Glenlyon and its vicinity by his bravery and heading them occasionally in resisting the depredations of various tribes who wished to plunder the country.

"MacNaughtan having assembled threescore chosen men set out on his enterprise to put his son-in-law to death. Some of his party who secretly disapproved of this intention, sent notice of it to MacGregor of Breacdsliabh in Glenurchay, who apprised his son of the circumstance stating the route the MacNaughtans were to take. On receipt of this intelligence Ruara told some of his friends and neighbours what was in agitation, and proposed to abscond till the danger was over. The inhabitants answered that they owed him many a day for the manly protection that he had afforded them by his prowess and guidance. that he must not abscond but allow them to select threescore men to meet MacNaughtan man to man. This advice was adopted and MacGregor with his party set off to Innermheiran at the west end of Glenlyon, where he put his men in ambush at the east side of a rising ground, and went forward himself very much against the inclination of his followers. but he assured them that neither MacNaughtan nor any of his followers could know him as none of them had ever seen him. He had not proceeded far when he met the advance of MacNaughtan's party, with whom he entered into conversation in the course of which they told him that none of them had ever been in that country before. He observed that they appeared like a party bent upon some hostile expedition, and added that if it were not an improper question he would be glad to know to what place they were proceeding. The answer was that as none of them had ever been in these parts before, they did not know how far they were going, but that they knew the object of the expedition and asked if he was of that country, as in that case he might be of great use to them as a guide if he would undertake to be so. He replied that he was perfectly acquainted with the country but that his undertaking to be their guide would depend upon the nature of the service they had in view. They answered that they were accompanying MacNaughtan to put to death a person of the name of MacGregor who had run away with his daughter and that they were sure that MacNaughtan would give him a handsome reward if he would be their guide. John MacGregor acknowledged that he knew the man they were in search of; that he was a fierce and formidable man who would not be easily overcome, and certainly not without bloodshed but they asserted that if they could find him they would accomplish MacNaughtan's object. He then asked where MacNaughtan was and was informed that he was coming up on horseback. When he came up he was informed that this man (Ruara) was well acquainted with the country and knew his son-in-law and he would guide them to him. Upon hearing this MacNaughtan promised that if he would guide the party to the place where his son-in-law resided he would give him the seven farms possessed by his son-in-law. This induced MacGregor to say that he would certainly show them the man they were in quest of, but that he would not undertake to seize him. MacNaughtan was satisfied and the party proceeded towards the place where Ruara's men were posted. MacNaughtan having dismounted marched with the guide a little in advance of his party. In their route they came to a broad ditch in a swamp called Stair-caillach over which the guide leaped, but MacNaughtan was obliged to make a circuit before he could reach the spot where the guide was. When the party came up they were astonished at the leap which the guide had made. Some of them attempted it but fell short and up to the armpits in mire, and so were with difficulty got out and not a man of them could clear the ditch. They were under the necessity therefore of going round, but were pleased with the idea, that if they could meet the person they were in search of, the guide was so powerful a man that he alone would master him.

“Whilst the party was separated from MacNaughtan and the guide the latter put his hand into that of MacNaughtan, saying ‘Now Sir you have by the hand the man you seek.’ ‘What are you the man?’ said MacNaughtan. ‘I am,’ was the answer. MacNaughtan then called to his people to come for he had seized the man they wanted. Ruara upon this said, ‘If that is the case Sir I shall make sure of you, and my men who are at hand (and started up upon being called by MacGregor) will match yours and perhaps prevent any of them from returning to tell the news; and at all rules you shall fall with me.’ MacNaughtan was pleased at finding that his son-in-law was at the head of a body of people, and himself so fine a fellow and solemnly promised perpetual friendship saying that their people should in future be as one. The parties feasted on the ground which they respectively occupied without mixing and MacGregor remained in quiet possession of Ruara and other farms viz Balnacraig, Ruadrashruth-gearr, Balmeanach, Balchannait, Ballamtull, Ruadrshruthmore and Inverinan now rented at about £1200.

“At one period the whole of Glenlyon belonged to Ian dubh nan Lainn, There were nine Lairds of the name of MacGregor in that quarter of the country. Two battles. were fought.

“The Clan vic Iver formerly in Glenlyon quarrelled with MacDiarmid, MacIver struck MacDiarmid who complained to Stewart of Gart his foster brother. MacDiarmid was murdered.

“IV. Gregor MacGregor of Roro (Duncan’s eldest son) succeeded and married the daughter of the Laird of Weem, by whom he had issue several sons of whom was Patrick who got possession of Dunan in 1480 and Duncan who got Lerigan about the same time.”¹

The Obituary has the following entries, which partly correspond with the traditionary generations :—

“1477. Feb: 17. Death of Duncan Beg MacGregor at Roro.

“1491. March 10: Death of John Duncanson MacGregor at Bellicht (Balloch). He was buried in Inchadin in the north side of the Great Altar.

¹ The Memoir of Roro gives as the fifth in line another Gregor, stating that he married a daughter of Sir Colin Campbell by Lady Katherine Ruthven, and that he was beheaded on the stump of an old tree between Taymouth and Kenmore, but although this is popularly believed, it arises out of a confusion with Gregor nam Bassan Gheal, as will be seen farther on.

² It is not clear that Terloch Keir’s father, Duncan, belonged to Roro.

notices of MacGregor of Roro. The two recorded sons of Ian Cham are placed at the head, and a third brother, Duncan, is added according to the conjecture of Mr MacGregor Stirling. But it may be clearly seen that one generation in addition, at least, is required between an ancestor who lived about 1415 and one who died in 1515, and this is a sufficient reason for rejecting the conjecture that Roro descended from a brother of Gregor Aulin and of John Dhu. The race were known as the "Slios Dhonche," or Tribe of Duncan (whence Mac or Vic Condoquhy corrupted into "V^oonche"), and a distinction is made in the Obituary between the sons of Duncan and the sons of Duncan Beg. It is very difficult to bring the traditionary account and the persons therein named to correspond with the ascertained facts; tradition is apt to be imperfect as to dates and to skip generations. We may safely conclude that the first named Gregor of Roro in family history was Gregor Duncanson who died in 1515, but the "Baronage" supposes him to be a son of Gregor Aulin, whereas to match the dates he must have been his grandson, if his descendant, or otherwise his nephew. There is a difficulty in tracing Ian dhu nan Lann who, the traditional account states, was son and successor to Gregor. As this account also states that John Dhu was succeeded by his brother Duncan, and as it is known from the Obituary that there was a Duncan at the time, Father of another generation at Roro, we may suppose that both John Dhu nan bann and this Duncan were brothers of Ewin, son of Gregor Duncanson who is known to have died at Roro in 1511, and who may have been a younger brother of the other two, as it is not stated that he was possessor of Roro.

O.F., Obituary of Fortingal. McG.S., MacGregor Stirling. Names in brackets relate to those whose existence is only shown by the names of their sons and grandsons. Panel enclosed by a dotted line implies a name added from the Roro Memoir, but not recorded in Obituary.—(A. G. Murray MacGregor, 1896.)

MACGREGOR OF BALHALDIES.

This family are understood to be descended from the House of Roro. Their appellation in Gaelic is "Mac Ian mhallich," or son of John with the Bushy Eyebrows, and a traditional account of the origin of this name is given in a memoir by Lieutenant Alexander MacGregor, Innerhaddon, formerly in the Royal East Middlesex Militia. It is recounted that the daughter of a certain MacGregor of Ardeonig on Loch Tay, on the murder of her father, by order of one of the Campbell Lairds of Glenurchy, became heiress of the property, and that to protect her rights she resolved to seek a husband. "With this view she set out for Roro to solicit the protection of one of his sons, and the first to whom she had made the proposal refused her suit, but she was not to be easily defeated, and turned to another half-grown lad, saying that perhaps this 'Fear-na-Mail-each dubh' (alluding to his black eyebrows) would take her, to which he consented, and to this circumstance his descendants owe the name of Malloch."

The Obituary mentions :—

"1523 Feb: 9. Death of John Malloch M^cHustone, at Tullicheamin, he was buried in Killin."

From this we gather that the immediate ancestor of the Mallochs was named Hugh.

Farther traces of members of this family will appear later.

 MACGREGOR OF LEARAGAN.

The following is from a Memoir by Colonel Hugh MacGregor :—

"I. Duncan Macgregor, younger son of Gregor MacGregor of Roro (No 4) commonly called Donnacha dubh Liomhanach, from his having come from Glenlyon, got possession of Learagan, in Rannoch, from a tribe called clann Tavish, that resided there about the year 1480. His Estate consisted of eleven merks of land, extending from Aldcheardie to the Clachghlas near the east end of Loch Rannoch. His brother Alexander went to Rannoch about the same time, and after a hard fought battle, with a tribe called Clann- 'il bhuidh (Stewart) defeated them and took possession in Dunan. His Estate consisted of the Twelve merks of land, by west the river Ericht, the middle division of Slismine, or north side of Loch Rannoch having been then, as well for several generations before the sons of Roro came to Rannoch, possessed by the MacGregors of Ardlaraich. The descendants of Donnacha-dubh liomhanach, occupied Learagan either as Proprietors or as Tenants, from the above mentioned period till 1792 when the present system of sheep farming caused their removal. Duncan married a daughter of M^cPherson of Noelmore, in Badenoch by whom he had several children and was succeeded by his eldest son Malcolm MacGregor called Callum Glas or the pale faced Malcolm."

Different accounts agree that either Duncan or his son Malcolm was noted as a good sportsman, and one notice states that the lands were obtained from the Earl of Atholl, from satisfaction at MacGregor's activity and address and at the swiftness of his dogs at a hunting which took place in the Glens of Atholl.

MACGREGOR OF DUNAN.

Lieutenant MacGregor, Innerhaddon's, Memoirs contain the following account of this family :—

"I. Patrick, who first settled in Dunan in Rannoch and was the founder of this family, was the son of MacGregor of Roro in Glenlyon, who accepted his patrimony, from his father, consisting of a number of cattle, and a few men and set out to seek his fortune, as it was termed, about the year 1480. He happened to set out at a very fortunate time, for having proceeded only the length of the hill of Gar-Dunan, where he lodged all night with his cattle, a messenger, reached him early next morning from the camp of an adventurer who had lodged all night upon the opposite side of Loch Lydon, to try his hospitality ; and upon learning where they were, he sent their commander a fat cow. Their commander seemed much astonished at so unusual a gift, and asked his man who it was that had sent it, they could not tell, and consequently sent back to enquire. The two leaders met and having communicated their views to each other, MacGregor learned that he, who he had entertained, was the son of the Laird of Appin (in Argyleshire) and the head of a party of men intending to take revenge upon the inhabitants of the Braes of Rannoch, called Clann Ian Bhuidhe, and the clan Ian Maileach, who had but recently offered an affront to the Laird of Appin's men who were passing by. They then agreed to join issue, and that when they had rooted out the inhabitants, they would divide the conquered lands between them. They proceeded, and succeeded in conquering from the west as far as Errocht on the north side of the Loch, and as far as West Camghouran on the south side. MacGregor took possession of his own share and Stewart left a representative and a party of men to occupy his part, and returned to his own country. upon the next succeeding Sabbath, each with his party proceeded to the parish Church of Killiechonnan, which, when they were about to enter, a dispute arose about which should enter first, MacGregor or Stewart's representative, when both drew their swords and MacGregor slew his opponent. Word was immediately dispatched to Stewart to inform him of what had happened, to which he replied, 'That if he were there in person, there might be some cause for disputing MacGregor's precedence, but that he had never authorised his servant to dispute it for him; that the fellow only met with what he deserved, adding that as they could not agree together, MacGregor might enjoy the whole of it for him; which was the case, and MacGregor shortly sent, and settled one of his brothers in Learagan, from whom that family are descended and another at Learan from whom Clann-macGeal Callum, are descended.

Reflections may, of course, be made as to the lawlessness and turbulence of these proceedings, but those were times when physical courage and strength of arm, with some address in taking advantage of opportunities, were the only qualities much esteemed, and they knew no other means of gaining a livelihood. Traditions of a similar kind were very graphically told by many in the Highlands up till a few years ago, having been transmitted down by word of mouth with the full intention of neither adding nor taking away from them, although some deviations must have been unavoidable.

MAGGREGOR OF ARDLARICH.

This family is descended from the House of Glenstray, of which it is believed to be the next representative, failing the direct heirs, but it is supposed that none of the male line of Ardlarich remain in Scotland, and all trace of those abroad are lost.¹

In the Obituary the death is recorded on the 31st July 1526 of Gregor, son of John MacGregor, alias M^cEwine M^cAllaster of Glenstray, as has been noticed at the end of Chapter V., page 54. Mr MacGregor Stirling, from a comparison of dates, makes out that this Gregor left a son Allaster, father of Archibald Dhu M^cCondachie V^cAllaster in Ardlarich, mentioned under this name many years later, as will appear in the sequel. A Memoir from Lieutenant Alexander's papers only begins with a Gillespie (Archibald) Ruadh in the sixteenth century.

MACGREGOR OF GLENGYLE.

The Ancestor of this House is universally supposed to have been the fifth son of Gregor Aulin named Dougal, and that from some remarkable colouring of hair or eyes he was distinguished as Dougal Ciar, which word in Gaelic means dusky, dark brown, or dark grey, and which name became the designation of a very powerful and stirring tribe.

Besides these Perthshire Families, others settled in Aberdeenshire and elsewhere. An old MS. relates very circumstantially a settlement of the Clan in Braemar at Little Inverey, giving the date as far back as 1403, which is certainly too early.

The Gregories of Kinairdie trace their descent from a son of Roro who went to the Boyne in 1500, and married a daughter of the Laird of Finlater, by whom he had a son James surnamed Gregor, who became Chamberlain to Finlater at Woodland, in the parish of Udney. He married Agnes More, sister to William More of Ferryhill, and died in 1584.

These brief notices of the origin of the different families are merely given at this place to explain the names which occur in the histories of the subsequent times, and serve as a guide to the identification of some of the individuals mentioned. It is intended to give as full genealogical accounts as possible later on.

Before resuming the general history, an anecdote of one of the ancient Chiefs may be related, which, amidst the sterner features of the times, shows that the virtue of hospitality and good faith shone brightly. The following version of this anecdote, which is now well known, was communicated to Sir John MacGregor Murray by the Rev. Dr Joseph MacIntyre, Minister of Killin in 1800:—

“The Chief was at that time residing on his freehold in Glenorchy: His son had gone in the shooting season, with a party of young associates, to the Moors in the Braes of the country: they met with a young gentleman, of the name of Lamont from Cowal, who attended by a servant was going to Fort William. They all went to the kind of inn that was in the place, and took a refreshment together; in the course of which at the close of the day a trifling dispute arose betwixt Lamont and young MacGregor; Dirks were drawn, and before Friends could interfere, MacGregor fell wounded, and soon expired beside the table. In the confusion Lamont escaped, and though pursued, under the cover of night got securely to the House of MacGregor, the first habitation that met him by the dawn of the morning. The Chieftain had got up and was standing at the door, ‘Save my life’ said the stranger ‘for Men are in pursuit of me to take it away.’ ‘Whoever you are’ says MacGregor ‘Here you are safe.’ Lamont was but just brought to an inner apartment and introduced to the family, when a loud enquiry was made at the door if any stranger had entered the house. ‘He has’ says MacGregor ‘And what is your business with him?’ ‘In a scuffle’ cried all the pursuers, ‘He has killed your son, deliver him up, that we may instantly revenge the deed.’ MacGregor’s lady and his two daughters filled the house with their cries and lamentations, ‘Be quiet’ says the Chief, with his eyes streaming with tears, ‘and let no man presume to touch the youth- for he has MacGregor’s word and honour for his safety and as God lives, he shall be safe and secure whilst in my house.’ In a little, after every kind treatment of Lamont he accompanied him with twelve men under arms to Inveraray saw him in safety on the other side of Lochfyne took him by the hand and thus addressed him, ‘Lamont, now you are safe: no longer can I, or will I, protect you; keep out of the way of my Clan. May God forgive and bless you.’ This happened some short time before the severe act of proscription against the Clan in the year 1633,¹ when to the discredit of Justice a weak government sacrificed a whole people for the atrocities of a few. MacGregor lost his property, and was hunted for his life by this iniquitous act: He took shelter in the house of this very Lamont, noted for his urbanity and his known contrition for the misfortune of his younger years, and by every act of kindness to his venerable guest, and some branches of his family in some measure revered the providence that had thus put it in his power to repay to the family in some measure the loss he had occasioned them by the death of a son.”

¹ The period must have been much earlier, if the Chief still lived in Glenurchay, and it must have been one of the earlier persecutions when he was hunted for his life.

Chapter XII

DURING the early years of Queen Mary, internal divisions and the dread of English invasions, entirely occupied the Government, therefore little is heard of the Highlands in the Public Records except the mention of a few Chiefs at the Battle of Pinkie.

The Reformation, which attained its recognition in 1560, had little effect amongst the distant mountains, where the usual feuds continued to prevail unchecked till after the return of the young Queen, the Dauphin's widow, from France in August 1561.

Soon afterwards the Queen's attention seems to have been directed to the conflicts in the North, as a series of proclamations shortly appear. The Queen's marriage with Lord Darnley took place on the 27th July 1565. On the 19th June 1566 the young Prince was born, and, on his mother's forced resignation, he was, in 1567, crowned King of Scotland as James VI.

The following year the perplexed Queen took the fatal step of trusting herself to the mercy of her cousin, Queen Elizabeth of England, who caused her, after a lingering captivity, to be executed at Fotheringay Castle in Northamptonshire, 8th Feb. 1587.

It has been related in Chapter IX. that Duncan Ladosach and two of his sons perished in June 1552. This slaughter seems to have dismayed and disorganised the Clan, for several Bands of Manrent with Sir Colin Campbell were soon afterwards made, doubtless with the object of obtaining a temporary respite from persecution.

It may have been about this time that a terrible outrage on the Clan Laurane took place. Subsequently, in the year 1604, John M^cCoul Chere with other M^cGregors was tried for the slaughter of eighteen householders of the Clan Laurane² (forty-six years syne or thereby), of which he was acquitted. It has also been alleged that Duncan Ladosach and his son Gregor were concerned in the raid, but as they were killed fifty-two years previous to this trial, the accusation does not coincide with the time supposed. There is a tradition that the immediate cause of provocation was that the M^cLauranes had cut the mouths of some horses belonging to the M^cGregors in Glen Dochart.

The M^cLauranes, who claim to have been settled in Balquhiddier since

² A monumental stone was placed in Balquhiddier churchyard, 1868, by Daniel M^cLaurin, Esq., of St John's Wood, London, a descendant of MacLabhrainn of Auchleskin, in memory of those who perished in this unhappy occurrence, with the following inscription, “In Memoriam of the Clan Laurin, anciently the allodian inhabitants of Balquhiddier and Strathearn, the Chief of whom in the decrepitude of old age, together with his aged and infirm adherents, their wives and children, the widows of their departed kindred, all were destroyed in the silent midnight hour, by fire and sword by the hands of a banditti of incendiarists from Glendochart. the thirteenth century, exercised a privilege of being the first to enter the Church of Balquhider at the Diets of Worship on Sundays. The M^cGregors shared this precedence, having in the fifteenth century stipulated, it is said, to be allowed to share the right, as a preliminary condition before they effectually assisted the M^cLauranes in a great fight with the Lenies. This right led eventually to a serious brawl inside the Church in 1532, when the vicar, Sir John M^cLaurane, was killed. (Taken from "Curious Episodes of Scottish History," by Robert Fittis.)

It has been stated in Chapter X. that Sir Colin Campbell had made John M^cCondoquhy Keeper of the Castle of Glenurquhay in 1550; his son, Gregor MacIain, appears to have obtained the appointment in succession to his father, who died a few months previous to this date.

Having obtained the escheit of so many of the ClanGregor, Sir Colin Campbell now endeavoured to turn it to the best advantage, and having a lease from Sir Alexander Menzies of part of the Loch Rannoch lands, arranged to sublet them to MacDonald of Keppoch, to get their support against the MacGregors.

Contract between Glenurquhay and Cappycht (Keppoch) :—

The Macdonalds of Keppoch were not more famed for their docility than the MacGregors, and possibly they found the task of guarding the country uncongenial, for the following year Rannald M^cCouilglas of Cappicht renounced by contract his right to the 12 merkland of Rannocht.—“Black Book of Taymouth.”

In consequence of the complaints made against Sir Colin for the manner in which his commission was executed amongst those who he was supposed to be protecting from the MacGregors, the following band was required:—

Soon after the arrival of the Macdonalds of Keppoch in Rannoch, they began to rebuild the dismantled fort or castle of the Isle of Loch Rannoch, which by order of James V. had been demolished, the aim being to drive the MacGregors from the lands of Rannoch, and hold their goods under Glenurchy's warrant. The Queen kindly interfered in favour of the persecuted MacGregors.

“1564. Sep^{ber.} 29. Summons in the name of Queen Mary and under the signet at Edinburgh on the narrative that a complaint had been made by James Menzies of that Ilk, and that whereas he had the lands of Rannoch and forest thereof in few farm heritably; and because Coline Campbell of Glenurquhay, and Ranald M^cRanald M^cConilglas, under pretext of a gift of escheat to the said Colin of the goods of the Laird M^cGrigor the Queen's rebel, and at the horn had intruded themselves wrongously in the Isle of Lochrannoch, and the said James's lands of Rannoch 'be-est the vatter of Erachtie' and were bigging and fortifying the said isle to the trouble of the whole country; the said Ranald and his complices being of the Clanrannald and Clan Chameroun and 'utheris of the maist broken clans within our realm.' That the said James Meingeis had complained of this to the Queen at her late being in Atholle in the 'Lunkairtis'; where being in her progress she could not take order fors reformation thereof, but wrote to the said Coline to cease from building in the said isle, and bringing in of strangers of other clans and countries, and to meet the Queen on her return, either at St. Johnstoun or Dundie where she would take such order as might appertain to his reasonable contentment; nevertheless, they had still continued to fortify the said isle; and that when the Queen had given the said Coline, gratis the gift of the escheat, it was for the expulsion of the ClanGregour and not under pretence of it to fortifie the said isle, which strenth had been demolished in her father's time, and again at her command by the said Coline; nor had ever command been given to repair it, or occupy the said James Meingeis lands, to which the Clangregour had no right; far less would it be allowed to place in the same James's lands the Clanrannald and Clan Chameroun, who if once permitted to get possession, would ever claim kindness thereto: That the said Coline had met the Queen at her home-coming at Perth, and was commanded by our brother James, Earl of Murray, to come to Edinburgh to answer the said complaint which he had failed to do. Summoning the said Coline, therefore, to appear before the Queen and the Lords of her Council within 10 days after warning."—Contemporary Copy in Castle Menzies Charter Room Red and White Book.

“ 1565. July 27. James M^cGestalcarr V^cPhatrik and his accomplices were slain by Gregor M^cGregor of Stronmelocan with his soldiers at Ardowenec. They were wicked and oppressors of the poor and the said malefactors could not be suffered to live upon the earth.

Siclyk in Strathardill mony men slain be the men of Atholl and the Stuartis of Lorn.”

The following passages are taken from the introduction by William Skene, Esq., to “The Dean of Lismore’s Book,” a selection of ancient gaelic poetry :—

“In the latter part of the fifteenth and beginning of the sixteenth centuries, there dwelt here, the village of Fortingall, a family of the name of Macgregor. They were descended from a vicar of Fortingall, who, at the time when, during the century preceding the Reformation, the Catholic Church was breaking up, and their benefices passing into the hands of laymen, secured for himself and his descendants the vicarage of Fortingall and a lease of the Church Lands.

“Of the history of this family we know something from an obituary commenced by one of his descendants, and continued to the year 1579, by the Curate of Fortingall (Fothergill) which is still preserved.

“His son (whether legitimate or illegitimate we know not), was Ian Rewych, or John the Grizzled, termed Makgwykar or son of the Vicar.¹

“His Grandson was Dougall Maol, or Dougall the Bald or Tonsured called patronymically Dougall Johnson, or the son of John. This Dougall Johnson appears in 1511 as a notary public, and dwelt at Tullichmullin, where his wife Katherine, daughter of Donald M^cClawe, alias Grant, died in 1512. He is twice mentioned in the ‘Obituary or Chronicle of Fortingall’; in 1526, as repairing the cross in Inchadin, or the old Church of Kenmore, situated on the north bank of the river Tay, nearly opposite Taymouth Castle; and in 1529, as placing a stone cross in Larkmonemerkyth, the name of a pass among the hills which leads from Inchadin to the south.

“Of Dougall the Bald, the son of John the Grizzled, we have no farther mention; but of his family we know of two sons, James and Duncan.²

“James was a churchman. He appears as a notary-public, an office then held by ecclesiastics, along with his father, in the year 1511, and he early attained to honour and influence, through what channel is unknown; for in 1514, we find him as Dean of Lismore, an island in Argyllshire, lying between the districts of Lorn and Morven, which was at that time the episcopal seat of the Bishops of Argyll. He was besides Vicar of Fortingall and Firmarius or tenant of the church lands; and died possessed of those benefices in the year 1551, and was buried in the choir of the old church of Inchadin.

“In 1557, a year after his death, Gregor Macgregor, son of the deceased Sir James Macgregor, Dean of Lismore, as became the head of a small, but independent sept of the MacGregors, and with a due regard to its safety, bound himself to Colin Campbell of Glenurchy and his heirs, ‘taking him for his chief in place of the Laird of MacGregor,’ and giving him his calp.

“In 1557 Gregor and Dougall MacGregors, natural sons of Sir James Macgregor, receive letters of legitimation; and in 1574 Dougall MacGregor appears as Chancery of Lismore.

“It is unnecessary for our purpose to follow the history of this family any further; suffice it to say, that the two brothers James and Duncan, members of a Clan which though under the ban of the Government and exposed to the grasping aggression of their powerful neighbours, the Campbells of Glenurchy, considered themselves as peculiarly Highland, and had high pretensions as descended from the old celtic monarchs of Scotland—connected with the church, and as such possessing some cultivation of mind and such literary taste as Churchmen at that time had, yet born and reared in the farm house of Tullichmullin, in the secluded vale of

Fortingall, and imbued with that love for old Highland story and cherished fondness for Highland song, which manifests itself so much in many a quiet country Highlander, and which the scenery and associations around them were so well calculated to foster—the one from his high position in the Church of Argyll, having peculiar facilities for collecting the poetry current in the West Highlands—the other though his brother, yet as was not uncommon in those days, his servitor or amanuensis, and himself a poet—and both natives of the Perthshire Highlands—collected and transcribed into a commonplace book, gaelic poetry obtained from all quarters.¹

“This collection has fortunately been preserved. It is, unquestionably, a native compilation made in the central Highlands, upwards of three hundred years ago.”

This Deed, relieving the relations from their obligation to keep the peace and thus authorising them to pursue the murderers, is very remarkable, and is specially noticed by Mr Donald Gregory in his “Historical Sketch.”¹ The retribution on the culprits was formally carried out by the acting Chief himself, in the month of July, as recorded on the previous page.

About the same time, however, the following Letter of Fire and Sword was issued against the ClanGregor by the Earl of Argyll:—

“At Dunstafnis the 16. day of June 1565. my Lorde Erle of Ergyle with awyis (advice) of his kin, and friends present for the tyme, commandis that all and sindrie his subjectis, barrones, gentillmen, and tennentis, within his boundais, in cais the Clangregour now being the Quenis rebellis and enemies to the hous of Glenurquhay resort to thair boundis Sall with ane woce concur togidder and rais the schoutt aganis thame, and persew thaim with bayth sword and fyre to ther destructioun, and givis full commissioun to every man within our boundis to tak and apprehend the said Clangregour quhaever they may be gotten, and the takeris therof to have their escheit to their awin behuif, certifeing quhaevir contravenis this act or favouris or concelis the said Clangregour in ony sort that we sall persew thaim be extremite of law according to our former act maid theranent.

Scotland had again had the misfortune of a long regency till the last Regent, the Earl of Morton, was dismissed, and the young King nominally took up the reins of government himself in 1577, at the age of twelve years.

An interval in legislation relating to the Highlands appears after 1665-6 till 1580-1, when King James VI. began a series of minute and watchful legislation against the ClanGregor, with the intention of pacifying the Highlands in general.

Chapter XIV

CONTINUATION of the "Historical Notices" of Professor Donald Gregory, from Chapter III., page 35 :—

"The ClanGregor had during the reign of James V. become very numerous in Balquhider, and in the adjacent district of Strathearn, and as may well be supposed were proportionally annoying to the Lowlands next to that great natural boundary by which the Highlands are so strikingly defined. This appears from several passages in the Justiciary Records, and likewise from a deposition made before the Lords of Council on 22nd Dec. 1530, by John Drummond of Innerpeffray, and William Murray of Tullibardine, to the following effect: That Sir John Campbell of Calder, Knight, be authorite, supple and help of the Erle of Ergyle, may cause the ClanGregour to keep gude rewle within thair boundis, siclik as uther pacifeit landis adjacent to them; and that the Kingis liegis may lief in rest and pece for onie skaith to be done be the said ClanGregour, the said Sir John bindand him thairfoir with support of the said Erle as said is.¹ This proceeding was two days after followed by a respite to the ClanGregor from all criminal actions for the space of ten days, with licence to them to appear before the King and Council within that time 'to wirk and mene for thaim of all attemptatts bigane, and to geif plegeis and sufficient securitie for gud rewle in tyme to cum.'²

"In making such incursions, the MacGregors did nothing which others of the Highland Clans were not more or less in the habit of doing. But as their depredations were generally committed in the neighbourhood of Perth or Stirling, where the Secret Council often met, and the Sovereign frequently resided, so they became peculiarly the terror of the government, and subject consequently to the operation of measures which from their extreme severity, as well as from the conflicting interests of the great barons employed in putting them into execution, failed in producing the desired effect, and only succeeded in forcing this devoted Clan to further acts of desperation. By this time indeed, many of the MacGregors were under one pretext or another denuded of every lawful means of supporting themselves and their families. Is it therefore to be wondered at that they should have perpetrated frequent spoliations, impelled as they were by the most necessity?"

Such results, however deplorable, flowed naturally and necessarily from the system, alike impolitic and inhuman, pursued with lands alleged to belong to the Crown; and by which, as we have seen, a numerous tribe was driven from one degree of privation to another, to struggle for existence against those who had law, no doubt, as well as power, but hardly justice, on their side.

“About the year 1560 arose a deadly feud between the MacGregors on one side and Sir Colin Campbell of Glenurchy on the other. From the representations on the subject to the Secret Council, a Commission of fire and sword was in 1563 issued to sundry noblemen and barons, against the ClanGregor.¹ Of this most anomalous production, the precursor of many such in later times, and which, in the preambles, indulge like this in the most unqualified abuse of the unfortunate race against whom they were directed, a prominent feature is the strict manner in which it is directed that the Clan be expelled from all the districts in which they dwelt, or to which they were in the habit of resorting, without specifying, or so much as hinting at, any other district into which they might be received. The impolitic and remorseless severity of this measure, which could only have been carried into effect by a universal massacre, naturally rendered it abortive. Another commission was accordingly next year (1564) issued to two only of the nine former commissioners,² from which we may infer that the former had not answered it's purpose.

“Sir Colin Campbell of Glenurchy had, about the date of the first of these commissions, been individually armed with a separate and additional commission of fire and sword against the Harbourers of the ClanGregor, in whatever part of the kingdom³—a proof that the Secret Council not only neglected to provide a place to which the ClanGregor might, when ejected from their homes, retire, but absolutely attempted to exclude them from every spot on which they might, on retiring, seek shelter, or even existence. Sir Colin, under colour of his individual commission, perpetrated on the lieges, as appears, atrocities not inferior to those alleged against the ClanGregor; and in consequence of a regular complaint by the barons and landlords of Strathearn, was, in the following year, threatened with loss of his commission, and in 1565, having been deaf to remonstrance, and persevering in the most intolerable outrages, actually deprived of it.

“As Glenurchy had been thus pre-eminent in severity against all whom he chose to suspect of tenderness towards the persecuted ClanGregor, we may fairly presume that his conduct towards the latter was not remarkable for moderation. In the manuscript history, indeed, of the Campbells of Glenurchy, and in a passage written by order of his son and successor, it is expressly asserted of him that ‘he was ane greit Justiciar all his time, throch the quhilk he sustenit that dedidly feid of the Clan-Gregour ane lang space; and, besides that he causit execut to the death mony notabill lymmaris, he beheidet the Laird of Makgregour himself, at Kenmor, in presence of the Erle of Athole, and the Lord Justice Clerk, and sindry other nobill men.' With the assistance as appears of Macdonald of Keppoch he invaded Rannoch, the ClanGregor's stronghold. His proceedings, however, on this occasion were formally complained of by the Laird of Weyme; whence we may infer that, in this, as in other instances, Glenurchy had overleaped the limits of his double and but too ample commission.

"There occurs in the history of the Clan at this time a singular instance of the weakness of Government, and of the difficulty of administering the laws in the then state of the Highlands. A number of the best disposed of the MacGregors had, on being charged to that effect, given hostages and found security for their good behaviour. While under this obligation one of them lost his life in a private feud with some neighbouring Highlanders. His kinsmen eager for revenge, but at the same time deterred by the penalty in the bond from taking it on the spot, applied to the Sovereign (Queen Mary), and obtained, not the trial of the alleged culprits, but a warrant to relieve themselves from their obligation to keep the peace, seeing, as the warrant expresses it, 'that nane ar mair mete for persequitioun of the tressonabill murthouraris of the said umqle Gregor nor the foirnamit persones hauing thair neir kinsman slane quhilkis dar nocht put on armes and persew the said murthouraris be ressou of thair souerteis standand undischaregit.'¹

"It cannot be surprising that the disorders of the ClanGregor, far from being suppressed, should under such a government, have increased with each succeeding year. We find accordingly, that in the year 1566, the tenants and feuars of Menteith presented to the Government a supplication praying to be relieved from payment of their rents and duties, the whole Lordship having, as stated in the complaint, been laid waste by the ClanGregor.²

"That the ClanGregor were in many instances the tools merely of their more powerful neighbours is highly probably. The celebrated George Buchanan, in a political pamphlet, printed and circulated in 1571, alluding to the Hamilton Faction, introduces, as illustrative of this theme, a passage descriptive of the then known state of society in Scotland. 'Howbeit,' says he, 'the bullerant blude of a King and a Regent about thair hartis quhair of the lust in thair appetite gevis thame litle rest dayly and hourly making neu provocatioun; yit the small space of rest quhilk thay haue beside the executioun of thair crewaltie thay spend in devising of generall unquyetness thro' the haill countrie; for, nocht content of it that thay thameselfis may steal, bribe, and reave, thay set out ratches on euerie side to gnaw the pepillis banes, after that thay haue consumit the flesch, and houndis out, ane of thame the Clan Gregour, another the Grantis and Clanquhattane, another Balcleugh and Fairnyhirst, another the Johnstounis and Armstrangis.'³ The peculiar circumstances, doubtless, in which the Clan Gregor had been so long placed in relation to their ancient possessions, must have disposed them to enter with alacrity into every plan, however violent and rapacious, by which they might have the slightest chance to better their condition; and more particularly as, in any event, they had nothing to lose.

“In 1581 an act of the Legislature, reprehensible for its glaring iniquity, was passed under the title of ‘Ane additioun to the Actis maid aganis notorious Theiffis and Sornaris of Clannis.’ By this it was made lawful for any individual who might happen to sustain damage from a notorious thief, or from a ruffian insisting to be an inmate of a family, living at its expense, and on the best it could produce, provided the actual delinquent could not be laid hold of, to apprehend and slay the bodies, and arrest the goods of any of the Clan to which the culprit belonged, until satisfaction was made to the injured party by the rest of the said Clan. This act must have been severely felt by the Clan Gregor, whose feud with the family of Glenurchy still continued to rage with unabated animosity. About this time accordingly Gregor MacGregor of Glenstray, Laird of MacGregor, was executed by Duncan Campbell, younger, of Glenurchy.

“As there is something singular in the history of the MacGregors of Glenstray, the noticing of a few particulars concerning them may not be irrelevant. Soon after the extinction, whether real or apparent, of the very ancient family of Glenurchy, we find a branch of the Clan Gregor holding the small estate of Glenstray, 20 merks old extent, as vassals of the Earl of Argyle. The MacGregors of Glenstray were allied matrimonially to most of the principal families of the name of Campbell; and so long as they continued to hold their lands of the Argyle family, they appear to have flourished, so as to become, in process of time, the most consequential house of their Clan. On the other hand, when the Earl of Argyle had conveyed the superiority of Glenstray to Campbell of Glenurchy, which he did in 1554, these MacGregors shared the wretched fate of the rest of the Clan, as it was obviously the great aim of the Glenurchy family to get rid of every vassal of the name of MacGregor. They refused to enter Gregor MacGregor MacGregor of Glenstray as heir to his father, on the ground possibly of his being a rebel in the eye of the law; and after the death of Gregor, who as formerly mentioned was executed by Campbell, younger, of Glenurchy, they denied the proper feudal investiture to his son Allaster, who in 1590 was legally ejected from the lands of Glenstray, on the assertion that he was merely tenant of these lands against the will of the proprietor as Sir Duncan was pleased to style himself. We see then that this time the leading family of the name of MacGregor was in no better situation than others of the landless Clan.

“In January 1584-5 the Secret Council summoned several of the Highland Chiefs and Barons connected with Perthshire and Argyleshire, and amongst the rest Ewin MacGregor, Tutor of Glenstray, to appear personally before the King and Council, to answer to such things as should be inquired at them touching the suppression of the Lymmars and broken men of the Highlands, by whom the countries of Lennox, Menteith, Stirlingshire, and Strathearn had, as alleged, been cruelly harassed. What proceedings, if any, were adopted by the Council, does not appear. It is probable that they now, however, commenced the draft of a long act of parliament, vulgarly called 'the General Band,' and which was passed in 1587. By one of the many sections of this voluminous act, it was declared that theft committed by landed men should be reckoned treason, and punished as such. It was farther ordained, that the Captains, Chiefs, and Chieftains of the Clans, both Border and Highland, be noted in a roll, and obliged under pain of fire and sword, to surrender to the King and Council certain pledges or hostages, liable to suffer death if redress of injuries were not made by the persons for whom they lay. We shall presently have occasion to see the attempts made, under the operation of this act, to reduce the ClanGregor to obedience.

"The slaughter of Drummondernoch, Under King's Forrester of Glenartney, said to have been committed in 1589 or 1590, by some of the ClanGregor, induced the Secret Council to grant in 1590 a commission of fire and sword to various noblemen and gentlemen, for pursuit of the whole Clan, of whom nearly 200 are mentioned nominatim in the commission and which is said to have been executed with extreme severity in the district of Balquhider especially, and around Lochearn.

"In July 1591 Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurchy had a commission of fire and sword against the ClanGregor, who are described as being for the most part rebels, and at the horn for divers horrible crimes and offences committed by them; and also against their harbourers; with power to convocate the lieges of Breadalbane and the adjacent districts to aid in the execution. The various noblemen and barons of these countries are enjoined under severe penalties to aid Sir Duncan with all power. The King as stated in the commission had been informed of certain bonds of maintenance subsisting between Sir Duncan on the one part, and some of the more leading individuals of the ClanGregor on the other, and between the last mentioned and sundry others of the noblemen, barons, and gentlemen; and which if suffered to remain in force might, as was thought, hinder the execution of the commission. All such bonds were therefore declared void and null, and Glenurchy strictly prohibited from entering into any engagements of this nature. Six months however, had scarce elapsed when Sir Duncan obtained his Majesty's licence to enter into bonds of friendship with the MacGregors, including an oblivion of all past animosities and authorising him to liberate such of the Clan as were then in his custody, in consequence as may be presumed, of his fidelity in the discharge of his late commission against them. In virtue of the royal licence, a contract was entered into by the principal barons in the Highlands of Perthshire, among others Sir Duncan Campbell on one part, and Allaster Roy MacGregor of Glenstray, having 26 of the leading persons of the ClanGregor as his sureties, on the other. The parties became bound to abstain from mutual slaughters and depredations; and in any disputes that might arise, to renounce their own jurisdictions, and submit to the commissariat of Dunblane. The youthful Laird of MacGregor soon found to his confusion that he had undertaken a task beyond his strength; nor was it long ere he incurred the usual penalties of the law for non-fulfilment.

“On 1st Feb: 1592-3, Archibald seventh Earl of Argyle, whilst yet in his nonage, had from the King and Council, a commission ‘aganis all and sindrie of the wicked ClanGregour and the Stewartis of Balquhiddier’; with power to charge them by his precept to appear before him, to find surety, or to enter pledges for the preservation of peace and order, as the Earl should think most expedient. Recusants were given over to the discipline of fire and sword; and Argyle empowered to convocate the lieges within the sheriffdoms of Bute, of Tarbet, and of so much of those of Perth and Stirling as lay within 21 parishes specified, for pursuit of the persons of the ClanGregor and the Balquhiddier Stewarts. A proclamation accordingly was issued to all the barons and landed gentlemen within the districts above mentioned, to assist with their whole force; whilst 15 principal householders of the name of Macgregor were ordained to be charged to appear before Argyll as his Majesty’s Justice General and Lieutenant in those parts, on a certain and early day, to answer to such things as should be laid to their charge touching their obedience to the laws, under pain of being held ‘part-takers’ with the ‘broken men’ of the Clan in all their wicked deeds and punished accordingly. About this time, those barons and gentlemen who had the ClanGregor as tenants, and who in the Records are forensically styled ‘landlords of the ClanGregor’ forced by the severe enactments of the General Band, which made every landlord answerable for the misdemeanours of his tenants, began to take measures for an universal ejection of the Clan from their possessions; and as far as the forms of law could go, numerous ejections did in consequence take place,—to such an amount indeed, that when, in July 1596, the Laird of MacGregor appeared personally before the King and Council at Dunfermline, and bound himself for the good behaviour of his Clan, there was as may confidently be affirmed, scarce a single farm occupied by a MacGregor, unless by force, and in defiance of the proprietor. On this occasion the Chief after acknowledging his past offences and expressing his contrition, promised to remain in attendance on the King, as a hostage for the obedience of his tribe. He seems however, to have soon become tired of this unwonted thraldom, where he found himself out of his natural element and to have made his escape to the mountains.

“Situate as this unfortunate Gentleman, and his no less unfortunate Clan, now were, they appeared to Argyle (who although only a youth, had already begun to distinguish himself by that crafty policy which marked the whole of his long and crooked career) fit instruments for extending his power and influence in the Highlands and for avenging his private quarrels, as will be illustrated in the sequel; and it will scarcely be believed that distant tribes under the order of this nobleman plundered and laid waste the lands occupied by the ClanGregor, in order no doubt, that the measures of retaliation which the latter were expected to adopt, might still farther widen the breach between them and the constituted authorities, and make them more ready to follow the perfidious councils of this arch-dissimulator. The Laird of MacGregor, however, took the uncommon step of resorting to a Court of law for redress, being induced to this probably, by the persuasions of his real friends or by the heavy penalties under which he lay. He succeeded in obtaining a sentence of the Court for a large sum of damages; but as may be supposed, it was easier to obtain the sentence than to put it in execution in a state of society of which some notion may be formed from the terms of a protest taken by MacGregor's Counsel in this suit. 'that the Laird of Macgregor and his kyn, wer the first sen King James 1st his tyme that can and sought justice.' This assertion cannot be taken literally but there must evidently have existed good grounds for making it.

"In May 1599, the Barons on whose lands any of the Clan resided were charged to produce before the King and Council on 3d July, each of them the persons of the name of MacGregor for whom he was bound to answer; and the Chief and his whole Clan were charged to appear on the same day, 'to underlye such order as should be taken with them touching the weal and quietness of the country.' On 25th July 'Offeris for Allaster Makgregour of Glenstray' were in his name presented to the King by Sir John Murray of Tullibardine, Knight, Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurchy Knight, and John Grant of Freuchy (known as the Laird of Grant).¹

"In pursuance of these offers various proceedings took place, in which the anxiety of the Council to reduce the ClanGregor to obedience without undue severity is very manifest. All their good intentions however were secretly frustrated by Argyle, who undid in the Highlands, what had been done at Court. whilst the whole blame meanwhile rested upon the unfortunate Laird of MacGregor, who was charged by the Council with having dishonourably violated his most solemn engagements. For proof of this assertion reference is made to the dying declaration of MacGregor, and likewise to a statement made by the gentlemen who had become his sureties, that the 'default of the not entrie of the said Allaster with his said pledge, at the peremptour day appointit to that effect, wes not in thame (the sureties) bot procedit upoun sum occasionis quhilk intervent and fell oute befor the day of his entrie, quhilkis discouraget and terrifiet him to keip the first dyet.'

"At last the King and Council in despair of reducing the Clan to the obedience of the laws by the existing plan, constituted the Earl of Argyle his Majesty's Lieutenant and Justice in the whole bounds inhabited by the ClanGregor, and invested him with the most ample powers, extending over as well the harbours of the MacGregors as the MacGregors themselves; and it was provided that the former should be responsible for the crimes of those of the latter to whom they might give shelter and protection. The commission was to continue in force for a year, and longer if not specially discharged; and the King promised not to show favour or to grant pardon to any of the Macgregors during the continuance of the commission, but to remit them and their suits to the Earl's disposal.

"Under Argyle's administration, the Clan, as might be expected from the policy pursued by that nobleman, became daily more troublesome to the Lowlands, and to such of the proprietors more particularly who had the misfortune to be at feud with Argyll. The Lairds of Buchanan and Luss suffered severely from the incursions of the ClanGregor; and those of Ardkinlass and Ardincaple escaped assassination only by the Laird of MacGregor's refusal to execute in their cases the revolting fiats of the King's Lieutenant. Finally in the spring of 1603 at the instigation of Argyle couched probably in the most imperious terms, MacGregor with his men of Rannoch invaded the Lennox, and fought the celebrated conflict of Glenfrune, opposed by the Colquhouns and their friends and dependants; and having routed these with great carnage, ravaged the whole district, and carried off an immense booty.

"The King and Council, horrified by the intelligence of this hostile inroad, proceeded to take the most severe measures for bringing the offenders to justice. A series of sanguinary enactments against the unhappy ClanGregor was crowned by that of the proscription of the names of Gregor and MacGregor under pain of death, which bears date 3d April 1603.¹ Argyll was the first to turn upon the unfortunate chief, whom, and several gentlemen of his Clan, he betrayed in circumstances peculiarly infamous, and all inquiry into the origin of the raid was studiously stifled to save the Earl. The Declaration however of his victim produced on the trial, and preserved in the original, distinctly charges Argyll with having caused MacGregor not only to violate engagements under which he had come to the King and Council in 1599, as above detailed, but to commit many of the crimes for which he was about to suffer death.²

² This is evident from there being a packed jury on the trial of the Laird of MacGregor, notwithstanding the notoriety of the crimes charged, and from the indecent haste which mark the whole of the proceedings in Edinburgh; not to mention from Calderwood's History, and other sources, that seven gentlemen of the name of MacGregor were executed along with the Laird of MacGregor without a trial, although, as asserted by the candid historian, "reputed honest for their own parts."—D. Gregory.

“I have thus, in the preceding pages, endeavoured to show that the causes of the proscription of the ClanGregor were closely connected with the impolitic system on which the ancient crown lands were managed; and that this Clan suffered more severely under that system than others from having lost their early freehold possessions, or at least the greater part of these by forfeiture, as early as the reign of King Robert Bruce, and being thus deprived of that weight in the Councils of a rude nation which uniformly accompanies the possession of extensive land-property. This view is farther confirmed by a fact that I have lately discovered, that King James V. actually proscribed the Clan Chattan by acts equally severe with those directed by his grandson against the ClanGregor. Wherein consisted the difference between the two Clans? The answer is obvious. The Captain of the Clan Chattan and several of the chief gentlemen of his tribe, held extensive possessions under the Crown, and were thus in a manner independent of the great families in the neighbourhood. How different the case was with the ClanGregor we have already seen; and the fate of the Macdonalds of Glencoe (who were in other respects more favourably situated) is nearly parallel to that of the MacGregors and may be traced to the same causes.”

Chapter XV

MacGregor of Glenstray

RETURNING to the MacGregors of Glenstray it was noted in Chapter V.¹ that John of Glenstray died of the hurt of an arrow, and was succeeded by his brother.

VI. Gregor Roy MacGregor of Glenstray, who was never infeofed in this property although bearing the title of it. Archibald Earl of Argyll sold the superiority of the twenty markland of Glenstray to Colin Campbell of Glenurquhay in 1556, and granted the ward and marriage of Gregor MacGregor, heir of the late Allaster, to him.

The "Black Book of Taymouth" contains the following short history :—

"Gregor Roy his (John's) brother succedit to him The said Gregour Roy mariet the Laird of Glenlyoun's dochter, ' by whom he had ' Allaster M^cGregour and Johne Dow M^cGregour his brother. the foresaid Gregour wes execute be Coline Campbell of Glenurquhay."

Possibly Sir Colin might have befriended him if he had been willing to give up his own Clan, but Gregor evidently preferred to cast in his lot with his persecuted brethren. His name is found in several of the complaints against the MacGregors, and in 1563 we have seen in a previous page² that he endeavoured to "fortify" himself, as it was called, by a treaty of alliance with Stewart of Appin, a family who had also "trokings" with MacGregor of Roro; but there is no evidence of his having led any great outbreak, and the notices of the Clan in the twenty years succeeding the death of Duncan Ladosach and his son Gregor, also called Roy, not having been specially turbulent, it must be supposed that there were some feuds, the history of which has not been transmitted, or other causes to excite the malignity of Glenurquhay and as it seems the displeasure of the Government. Tradition appears to confound the death of Duncan Ladosach with that of young Glenstray; both deeds were the work of Glenurquhay, but it is apparently to the latter to whom reference is made in the Biography of Sir Colin in the "Black Book": "he beheiddit the laird off M^cGregour himself at Kandmoir in presens of the Erle of Atholl, the justice clerk and sundrie other noblemen."

"In 1569. A commission was given to the Laird of Glenurchy to 'justify' Gregor M^cGregor of Glenstray, who was accordingly beheaded on the green of Kenmore."—Breadalbane Papers in Report of The Historical Commission.

"Obituary. 1570 the 7. day of Apryll Gregor M^cGregor of Glensra heddyt at Balloch."

There have been conflicting theories as to the hero of the beautiful gaelic song "Cumha Ghriogair MhicGhriogair," but from tradition and various circumstances it seems probable that Gregor of Glenstray was the Gregour Roy nam Bassan gheal (of the white hand or palm), and from the "Black Book" his marriage with a daughter of Campbell of Glenlyon has been ascertained. The gaelic words of this old lament are here given with the English translation, both copied from the "Killin Collection of Gaelic Songs" by Charles Stewart, Esq., Tighnduin Killin, which has the following preface giving the Glenlyon tradition of the story:—

"In the latter half of the sixteenth century lived Duncan Campbell of Glenlyon who was so celebrated for his hospitality that he was known as 'Donnacha Ruadh na Feilach.' His residence was 'Caisteal a Curin-bhan' about two miles above the pass. He had a daughter whom he intended giving in marriage to the Baron of Dall, on the south side of Loch Tay. The daughter was of a different opinion for having met with young Gregor MacGregor of Glenstrae she gave up to him her heart's warmest affections and which he fully returned. In spite of all opposition, she left her father's house, and married him. Duncan was bitterly vexed, and so were the then heads of the eastern Campbells, Sir Colin of Glenurchay and his son 'Black Duncan.' In consequence Gregor and his wife were followed with the most unrelenting enmity. They were often obliged to wander from place to place, taking shelter in caves under rocks, and in thickets of woods. On the night preceding the 7. of April 1570, they had rested under a rock on a hillside above Loch Tay. Next morning after taking such breakfast as in the circumstances they could compass, the young wife sat herself on the ground, and dandled her young babe in her arms whilst Gregor was fondly playing with it. This endearing episode of pure love and affection was ruthlessly broken in upon. In an instant they were surrounded by a band of their foes, and carried off to Balloch. Gregor was at once condemned to death, and beheaded at Kennmore in presence of Sir Colin; his wife, daughter of the Ruthven, who looked out of an upper window; Black¹

Duncan ; Atholl the Lord Justice Clerk, and Duncan Campbell, of Glenlyon. Most pitiful of all, the unutterably wretched wife was forced to witness her Husband's execution. Immediately thereafter, with her babe in her arms she was driven forth by her kindred helpless and houseless. The kindness however thus cruelly denied, was abundantly given by others who sorely pitied her sad case. In her great anguish she composed the song that follows, and sung it as a lullaby to her babe :—

LAMENT FOR GRIGOR MACGRIGOR.

(Translation by Charles Stewart.)

“Ochan, ochan, ochan, ooree,
Breaks my heart my own wee dear,
Ochan, ochan, ochan, ooree,
Thy slain father cannot hear.

- 1 Early on last Sunday morning,
I was joyous with my love ;
Ere that noonday had passed o'er us
I was pierced with sudden grief.

- 2 Cursed be nobles and my kindred,
Who have sorely stricken me ;
Foul betrayed my own heart's darling,
Seized him fast and laid him low.

- 3 Were there twelve men of his clanship,
And my Grigor them to lead,
My sad eyes were not thus streaming,
Nor my child so sore bereft.

- 4 His dear head upon an oak-block,
They have placed, and shed his blood ;
Could I have a cup of that, then
Ah, how deeply could I drink.

- 5 Oh ! that Colin were plague-smitten,
And my father in sore pain,
Whilst the daughter of the Ruthven,
Rubbed her hands and palms in vain.

The compiler of "The Lairds of Glenlyon" records his version of the Glenlyon tradition on the subject of Gregor MacGregor of Glenstrae's marriage to be that her father, Duncan Roy Campbell of Glenlyon, was friendly to Gregor, although probably obliged to follow the lead of his chief, Colin Campbell, at the last. In this work the following prose version of the translation is somewhat closer to the original:—

"On Lammas morn I rejoiced with my love: ere noon my heart was pressed with sorrow.

"Ochain, ochain, ochain, uiridh,
Sad my heart my child:
Ochain, ochain, ochain, uiridh,
Thy father hears not our moan.

"Under ban be the nobles and friends who pained me so: who unawares came on my love, and overmastered him by guile. Ochain &c.

"Had there been twelve of his race, and my Gregor at their head, my eyes would not be dim with tears, nor my child without their father. Ochain &c.

"They laid his head upon an oaken block: they poured his blood on the ground: oh had I there a cup I would drink of it my fill.

"Oh that my father had been sick, and Colin in the plague, and all the Campbells in Balloch wearing manacles.

"I would have put 'Gray Colin' under lock and 'Black Duncan' in a dungeon, though Ruthven's daughter would be wringing her hands.

"I went to the plains of Balloch, but rest found not there: I tore the hair from my head, the skin from my hands.

- 14 Fain would I be with my Grigor,
 'Neath a wrapper torn and bare,
 Than of Dalach the wee Baron's,
 Silks and gauzes as my wear,
- 15 Though it snowed, and though it drifted,
 On a 'day of seven blasts'
 Yet a crag my Grigor found me,
 Where I warmly there could rest.

Ba hu, ba ho, my own wee dearie,
 Thou art but a little child,
 E'en in manhood, I much fear me,
 You his death can't full redeem."

"Had I the wings of the lark the strength of Gregor in my arms, the highest stone in the castle would have been the one next the ground.

"Oh that Finlarig were wrapped in flames, proud Taymouth lying in ashes, and fair haired Gregor of the white hands in my embrace.

"All others have apples: I have none: my sweet lovely apple has the back of his head to the ground.

"Other men's wives sleep soft in their homes: I stand by the bedside wringing my hands.

"Better follow Gregor through heath and wold, than be with the mean little Baron of Dall¹ in a house of stone and lime.

"Better be with Gregor putting the cattle to the glen, than with the mean little Baron drinking wine and beer.

"Better be with Gregor under sackcloth of hair, than wear silken sheen as the mean Baron's bride.

"Though it snowed and drifted, and was a day of sevenfold storm Gregor would find me a rock, in whose shelter we might lie secure.

"Ba hu, ba hu, my orphan young,
 For still a tender plant art thou
 And much I fear the day wont come
 When thou shalt earn thy father's fame."

The latter version is much tamer, and the last verse especially seems to miss the widow's longing that her boy should revenge his father's murder.

¹ A MacOmie or son of Thomas.

The following letter addressed by Sir Colin Campbell of Glenurquhay to Gregor M^cAne, keeper of the Castle of Glenurquhay, only a few months after the execution of Gregor of Glenstray, shows the old Knight in a very different light; kind, considerate, and cheerful to a curious degree for a man who acted as executioner by choice:—

“1570 August 18. Gregor M^cAne—I commend me hartlie to yow. The severe measures, however, towards the rest of the Clan only provoked acts of revenge:—

² This Patrick was murdered two years later by the Clan Dougal Ciar. Although his patronymics read Patrick, son of Gregor, son of Duncan Ladosach, he is not identical with Patrick Aulach, who was son of Gregor. Two explanations occur, either this Patrick Dow was a natural son of Gregor, or he was his brother, and "M^cGregor" is merely mentioned as a surname.

³ Younger brother of Gregor Roy.

Chapter XVI

WE now resume the Baronge Memoir which, although occasionally led into error, has always a valuable connecting thread. We find

“XVII. Duncan eldest son of the Gregor slain in 1552 and grandson of Duncan Ladosach, called Donach Abberach¹ from his having been immediately after his father's murder carried into Lochaber by his mother's friends, as were his two brothers, to Athol and Strathearn, by other relations, in order to save them from the like danger. He was a stout man of a very fine appearance, and soon acquired a reputation over all the Highlands; in so much that Duncan Dubh a Churic, dreading lest this young hero should make his old head answer for the murder of his father and grandfather, and also cut him out of the lands he had acquired by that and the like means from his family and friends. endeavoured by all means to reconcile himself to Duncan Abberach who would certainly have taken that cruel but just revenge; had not Locheil's influence prevailed with him to accept of the offer made by Duncan Dubh, of his father's lands, with those of Corriecharmaig and Tomachrochair, in Glenloch, as an addition; in consequence of which the two Duncans were sworn to an inviolable friendship in presence of Locheil and several other Chiefs, at a very numerous meeting of the friends of both parties, held for the purpose in the Braes of Glenurchy.²

“Duncan Abberach took for his first wife Christian, a daughter of the ancient family of Macdonald of Keppoch, by whom he had a son who died young.

“He married 2dly . . . , daughter to Macfarlane of that Ilk descended from the family of the Lennox and by her he had three sons whose descendants are at this day known by the name of Slioch Donachadh Abberach, ‘the tribe of Lochaber Duncan.’

“1. Patrick his heir, whose line carried on the representation. See further on.

“2. Robert,³ a man of a rare martial genius. He laid the plan of attacking the Colquhouns.

“3. Alpin who married and had issue of whom Sir Evan Macgregor of Newhaven.”

The first mention of Duncan Abberach on his return from Lochaber is in the record of forfeitures, Sept. 8th, 1569.¹ He soon afterwards found favour with the Earl of Argyle, as appears from the following Bond of Maintenance :—

“ 1573. August 24. . . . Be it kend till all men and sundrie to quhom it efferis we Archibald Erle of Argyle Lord Campbell and Lorne justice and chancellor of Scotland &a. &a. to haif resavit our louittis (lovites) Duncan Abbroche M^cGregour, Patrik M^cGregour, Allaster Skorinche () M^cGregour, Molcollum M^cGregour, Patrik Awilochi (Aulach) M^cGregour and Dougal M^cGregour the saidis Duncanis bredrene, thair airis and offspring in our maintenance. This Paper, quoted in the “Chartulary,” after Mr MacGregor Stirling’s careful investigations among the Luss Papers, corroborates the names Patrick Aulach, and of Duncan’s son Robert, as given in the “Baronage” many years before the existence of this Band was known.

“ 1580-1. 19. Jan. Holyroodhouse. Complaint of Johne Makintalgart in Bocastell, servant to James Commendator of Sanct Colme, as follows: On the 17, of Nov. last ‘Johnne Drummond of Drummondernoch, Johnne Makgruder, sone to James M^cGruder servand to the Lord Drummond, Alexander Reidoch, servand to the Lard of Cultilbragan, James Reiddoch, servand to William Reiddoch, Malcolme Closach M^cGrege, servand to the Lard of Calender, Allester M^cKewin servand to the Lord Drummond and his sone, and tailyeour Makwillie, houshalld man to the Lard of Tullebragane, with utheris thair complices, come under silence of nicht to the said Johnnes duelling hous of Bocastell, and perforce rift spulyit and awaytuke ane hundreth pundis of reddie money being in ane kist in his said hous to his utter wrak and herschip; pertening to him and utheris nychtbouris, thre mylk kye and all the said Johnnes insicht and plenessing of his said house. to his utter wrak and herschip; lyke as thairafter thay pat violent handis on the said Johnnes persoun tuke him perforce with thame and detenis and withaldis him in strait prisoun and captivitie.’ Charge had been given to the defendants to liberate the complainers within twenty-four hours under pain of rebellion, or else to appear before the Council presenting him or shewing cause to the contrary, and now ‘the said Johnne Makintalgart comperand be the said James Commendator of Sanct Colme and the defendants being of tymes callit and not comperand’ the order is made peremptory that thay present their prisoner before the Council on the last day of Jan. instant ‘that ordour may be taken with him as appertinis,’ under the pain of horning and escheat.”

The above, from the Register of the Privy Council, is not quoted in the “Chartulary,” and only one MacGregor and the M^cGrudars appear in it, but it gives an instance of the kind of raids that were continually taking place, and Drummondernoch was himself of the party.

The following proclamation was made by the Government :—

“ 1582. The King had ‘laitlie appointed ane Court of justiciary to be halden in the Burgh of Perth for administratioun of justice to all compliners, and appointit alsua certane personis of gude knowlege and experience to com-pone for remissionis to sic as wer not able to underly the rigours of the justice’ but having been informed ‘that the inhabitantis of the Highlandis and Brayis within this Schirefdoume, throw the lang troubles that wes among thame during the disobedience of the Clangregour and utheris broken men of the far Hielandis culd not weill abyde his Hienes lawes, na criminal justice in effect, being halden heir thir 29 yeris bygane,’ he had ‘condescendit thairfoir to grant thame mercy and pardon for thair bygane offensiss, to the effect that they comperand and being persewit be the compliners, suld find gud secur suritie to satisfie the parties offendid and to abstain from the lyke offensiss in tyme cuming.’ Notwithstanding this act of grace ‘litle special dittay hes been givin up, and nane or verie few complenaris hes offerit thame to persew the personis enterit on pannell sen the begyning of this present justice Court, how sa evir now thay murmur that thay be not redres of thair skaith sustenit.’ Now accordingly ‘to the effect that thay may ressave justice and guid redres and satisfioun of thair saidis skaithis bygane, and that the personis, offenders, for feir of thair lyffis and in default of pardoun, sall not lie out and continue in thair former evil doingis to thair utter wrak and utter destructioun,’ it is ordered that proclamation be made by a herald macer, or other officer of arms, at the market cross of Perth and elsewhere, ‘to command and charge all and quhatsumevir personis compliners quhilkis hed ony special complaintes and dittayes upoun personis already arreistt to this present court of Justiciar that thay present and gif in the same to the justice clerk or his deputis with diligence, and be reddie to follow thair complaintis and to cause summund ane assise aganis the personis offendouris in cais thay sall offer thameselffis to enter on pannel in this burgh ay ony tyme betuix . . . and the 1 day of August nix to cum, or in Streviling befoir the fyftene day of the same month, quhair his Majestie hes willit thame to be ressavit in cais thay offer thameselffis to enter betuix . . . and the same said day, and als hes ordainit my Lord Thesaurar and utheis compositouris to grant componitur for remissioun to all maner of personis inhabitants of the saidis Brayis and Hielandis within this schirefdome, for all offensiss and crymes committit be thame in tymes bygane, thay comperand in judgement and findand gude suretie for satisfioun of the parties offendit unto and to abstain and forbear from like offences and crymes in tymes cuming.”—Register of the Privy Council.

It must be confessed that this reads as a very fair and merciful ordinance, but doubtless the deep sense of injury on the part of the Clan, the want of space, and means of livelihood, with the numerous temptations of habit and of the exciting times, forced on the more pacific spirits to renewed troubles at whatever cost.

- “1590. Colin the 3d of the Campbell Lairds of Glenlyon, had married (2dly) a sister of the Laird of Lawers who was very active in persecuting the Clan-Gregor. Colin was invited to join his relative in this oppression but he declined, and ‘threatened death to any who injured a MacGregor within his bounds.’ To mark his contempt he invited all the MacGregors in his neighbourhood to a great feast that he prepared for them. But there was a traitor in the camp: his wife had sent secret information to her brother Lawers and pointed out how, at one fell swoop, he could destroy so many enemies. As dinner was not served up as soon as Colin wished it, he sent his henchman to ask the cause of the delay. The lady forgetting herself replied quickly: 'I expect my brother.' The reply was announced in the hall; and the M^cGregors, thinking they had been entrapped, rushed out, deaf to all Colin could say. It was time: Lawers was crossing the ford below the Castle, before they gained the hill side. Colin was disgraced on his own hearth by his nearest friends."

General Band

AT this time the troubles in the Highlands, and also on the Borders, becoming source of disturbance to the nation and a constant anxiety to the Government, very stringent enactments were made, and, as they bore heavily on the future misfortunes of the Clan, it is desirable to quote them in full.

Both these Rolls have, for convenience, been taken from "The Transactions of the Iona Club, 1839, and the notes condensed from those of the editor, Donald Gregory, Esq.

It may be remarked that in the latter half of the sixteenth century, of which we are now treating, scarcely a Clan was at peace. The Earls of Sutherland, Caithness, and Huntly; the Murrays, MacKenzies, Gunns, Clan Chattan, and Gordons in the North and East were perpetually at war—bloodshed, fire, and even poison figure in their history. The MacDonalds, MacLeans, MacLeods, and MacNeills kept the West in fierce conflict. Such was the normal state of the country, and on the Southern Border matters were not much better. Some remedy was absolutely necessary. The scheme of the Government was very ingeniously contrived, though perhaps too fussy and minute to be easily workable. By it theft was made treasonable, a strong measure, as loyalty to the Sovereign had never been questioned in the Highlands. Frequent reference is made in subsequent years to this Act, known as the “General Band.” It did not work a speedy pacification, but in the instance of the Clan Gregor, more especially, actual existence was made impossible, except by fighting for it, as few could dare to shelter them under such precarious conditions.

Although other Clans were equally turbulent, none suffered eventually as severely. Mr Donald Gregory believed the chief cause of this to have been the circumstance that, unlike the Clan Chattan for instance, the Clan Gregor had no extensive possessions under the Crown which could render them independent of the great families around. It may be added that of their neighbours, Campbell of Glenurchy was ever ready to profit by their misfortunes, and Campbell of Argyle to make a cat's paw of them for his own purposes. Nothing but the brave and elastic spirit inherited from our ancestors, and the power of endurance learnt in the school of adversity, could have saved us from entire annihilation, such as some of our neighbours desired for us.

Two characteristic MacGregor songs from the “Killin Collection” seem to belong to about this period, and may therefore fitly follow here:—

NA TULAICHEAN (REEL OF TULLOCH).

“The following incident occurred in the latter part of the sixteenth or early part of the seventeenth century. A John MacGrigor, usually known as Iain Dubh Gearr of the Ruaru branch of that Clan, was at Killin attending St Fillan's market

(‘Feill Fhaolain’), which is held there in January. He was set upon in Street-house¹ by eight men; but being very powerful and a splendid swordsman, he either killed or seriously wounded the whole of them. Upon this he fled to Strathspey, where he married a young lady named Isabel Anderson. Twelve men and a superior in command were sent after to take him either dead or alive. He was slumbering in a barn when intelligence was privately brought him that they had arrived and were near at hand. His first impulse was to fly, but being strongly persuaded by Isabel, he resolved on fighting it out. They had a gun and a pistol, with plenty of ammunition, and as John fired at his pursuers through crevices in the wall, Isabel, who stood behind him, loaded. The result was that in a very short time the whole thirteen were severely wounded, whereupon John sallied forth and cut off their heads. Isabel gave him a draught of beer which he quaffed; and seizing her round the waist they improvised and danced those reel-steps which have ever since been so popular.² The words were also improvised and sung as a mouth-tune, but the music must have been old.

“John, it is said, afterwards became a peaceable and prosperous man; and it has been satisfactorily shown that the celebrated Doctors Gregory who did so much to establish the fame of the Edinburgh Medical School were descendants of his. Before settling down, however, there is reason to believe that he ‘raised’ some successful ‘creachs’ in Breadalbane. There can be no doubt about his period, as his name appears in the Record of Privy Seal, of date 15th May 1586.”

² Probably few who gaily dance this merry reel know anything of the grim tale of its origin. Iain Dubh Gearr’s name does not appear in the list of August 1586. Although it may read strange, yet after the intense strain of defending himself and his wife against such overpowering odds, that the excitement and reaction should culminate in violent exercise is not improbable.

NA TULAICHEAN.

“ Bu Ghriogaireach darireadh
 A Ruadh-shruth 'an Gleann-liomhunn.
 A rinn an ceòl 'tha riomhach,
 Ris canar leinn na Thulaichean.

Chorus—O Thulaichean gu Bhealaichean,
 'S 'o Bhealaichean ;
 'S mur faigh sinn leann 's na Thulaichean,
 Gu 'n ol sinn uisg e Bhealaichean.

B' ann an Tigh-na-Sràide
 Athug iad ionnsuidh bhàis air ;
 'S mur bitheadh e ro làidir,
 Bha ochdnar nàmh ro mhurrach air.
 O Thulaichean, &a.

Ach labhair Ian-Dubh-Geàrr riubh ;
 ' Bha mi ann 's a' cheàrdaich,
 'S cha chrom mi sìos mo cheann duibh,
 Ged thionndadh sibh uile rium.'
 O Thulaichean, &c.

'N sin bhuaile iad uil' air comhladh ;
 'S ged 'bha Ian Dubh na onar ;
 Cha b' ann da m' buannachd tòiseach,

 O Thulaichean, &a.

'S 'n uair thaisg e suas a gheur-lann,
 'S a dh' ioc e mheud 's a dh' eigh e,
 Gu 'n tug e 'n sin Srath Spé air
 'S bha té ann a chuir furan air.
 O Thulaichan, &a.

Chuir iad cuideachd làidir,
 Ann déigh Iain Duibh Mhic Phàdruc ;
 'S 'n uair shaoil leo e 'bhi 'n sàs ac'
 'S e bas bh' air a chumadh dhoibh.
 O Thulaichean, &a.

REEL OF TULLOCH.

“From Ruaru in Glenlyon
 A true MacGrigor scion,
 Made music which we own the chief,
 And which we call the Tullechin.

Chorus—From Tullechin to Ballechin
 From Ballechin to Tullechin;
 If beer we don't in Tullechin
 We'll water get in Ballechin.

In Streethouse at Feill Fhaolan
 On him they made an onset dead
 And were he not most manly brave,
 Eight sturdy men had mastered him.
 From Tullechin, &a.

Then Black John spake up hurriedly :
 ‘ I'm just come from the armoury
 And will not down my head coward-bend,
 Though all of you should grapple me.’
 From Tullechin, &a.

On this they all fell foul of him ;
 And though alone he stoutly faced ;
 ’Twas not advantage that they won
 For down their cheeks poured bloody drops.
 From Tullechin, &a.

Then having sheathed his good broadsword
 On shewing what his manhood could,
 He to Strathspey his steps betook
 And there a maiden welcomed him.
 From Tullechin, &a.

Against Black John MacPhatrick
 Was sent a stout and goodly band,
 But when they thought that him they'd caught
 ’Twas death that shaped their destiny.
 From Tullechin, &a.

Oir thàinig fios an uaighneas,
 Do 'n t-shabhal 's e na shuain ann .
 'Tog ort, Iain Duibh, 's bidh gluasadh,
 'S thoir as cho luath 's a 's urra dhuit.'
 O Thulaichean, &a.

'S e thuirt a leannan ceutach ;
 'A ghaoil, cuir ort,' 's bidh treunmhor ;
 Is dhuit bi thidh mise feumail,
 Oir bidh mi gu d' chuideachadh.
 O Thulaichean, &a.

'Thoir uidhean dhomh gu sùrdail,
 Is lionaidh mi gu dlùth dhuit,
 'N sin cumsa 'ghraidh, do chùl rium,
 'S do shùil air na h-uile fear.'
 O Thulaichean, &a.

Sheall e cia lion bh' ann diu,
 Mu 'n rachadh e gu 'n ionnsuidh ;
 Bha dà-fhear-dheug 'us ceannard.
 Co teann air 's a b' urra iad.
 O Thulaichean, &a.

Chum e riu a bhòtach,
 'S bha Isabail 'g a chònadh ;
 Cha do thàr iad gus an eòlas,
 'S ann leòn e gu h-ullamh iad.
 O Thulaichean, &a.

Gheàrr e leum gu h-eatrom,
 Gu 'n ionnsuidh, agus fraoch air,
 Cha d' ag e ceann air h-aon diu,
 Thoirt sgeul air an turas ud.
 O Thulaichean, &a.

'Mo bheannachd air an t-shealgair ;
 Ann ad chuirinn earbsa ;
 'S tu rinn an gnìomh neo-chearbach,
 'S tu dhearbh a bhi urramach.'
 O Thulaichean, &a.

To Black John 'midst his slumberings,
A message came in urgent haste :
'Be up Black John bestir you quick,
And take you off right speedily.'
From Tullechin, &a.

Then said his darling Isabel
'Be up and quit you valiantly
A helpmate true I'll make to you
In your sore straits to succour you.'
From Tullechin, &a.

'Your ammunition hand me quick
I'll load for him I fondly like,
As you with back straight turned on me
Your eye keep towards the enemy.'
From Tullechin, &a.

Ere Black John raised his battle shout
His eye he o'er the foe keen glanced,
Twelve men with one to lead them on
He found were closing fast on him.
From Tullechin, &a.

His musket then he aimed at them
Whilst Is'bel pressed each charge fast down ;
And ere their fears to danger woke
Sore wounded was each one of them.
From Tullechin, &a,

Then out he leaped with nimble bound
And with fierce wrath fierce kindling him,
No head he left on body then
To tell of their sad tragedy.
From Tullechin, &a.

'My blessings on my sportsman good ;
To him I will entrust my life ;
You there in strife a hero stood
And did a deed of mightihood.'
From Tullechin, &a.

Thuirt Iain Dubh 's e tionndadh :
 'O n' rinn mi 'n gnìomh bha shannt orm ;
 Ghaoil grad thoir deoch do 'n leann domh,
 'S gu 'n danns mi na Thulaichean.'
 O Thulaichean, &a.

'B' e 'n t' aighear 'us an t-aobhneas,
 'N am cruinneach re cheile,
 'N uair chluinneadhmid na teudan
 Ga 'n gleusadh do na Thulaichean.'
 O Thulaichean, &a.

'N a' mrbithinn mar bu ghnàth leam,
 'S MacAilpein a bhi làimh rium,
 Bu bhinn leam bhi ga eisdeachd
 'N uair thàireadh air na Thulaichean.'
 O Thulaichean, &a."

ORAN CHLANN-GHRIOGAIR. (GLENORCHY MACGREGOR'S SONG.)

"This song was composed by a MacGregor woman who was married in Glenorchy. It dates back probably to the early part of the 17th century when the persecution against this unhappy clan raged so fiercely. It points to a time when guns were not unknown, but when bows and arrows were still in use. The circumstances which called it forth arose out of these troubles. A party of them flying from their foes having taken shelter in her husband's house were suddenly informed that their pursuers were close at hand and in full view of the front of the house. The housewife with great presence of mind instantly rushed out and

ORAN CHLANN-GHRIOGAIR.

Mi am shuidhe 'n so 'm ònar,
 Air còmhnard an rathaid ;
 Dh'fheuch am faic mi fear fuadain
 'Tigh'n Chruachan a' cheathaich.
 'Bheir dhomh sgeul air Clann Ghriogair
 No fios cionn a ghabh iad,
 'S iad bu chuideachd a dhomhsa
 Didomhnuich so chaidh.

Says Black John turning towards his bride :
' Since I did what I meant to do ;
Give me a drink of beer to quaff,
And we will dance the Tullechin.'
From Tullechin, &a.

' In meets for joy and happiness,
What mirth and gladness fills our hearts
Whene'er we hear the strings attuned
For giving us the Tullechin.
From Tullechin, &a.

' Were I where my desire is set
MacAlpin sitting by my side
With what delight I'd hear him play
The King of tunes the Tullechin.'
From Tullechin, &a."

sitting herself by the roadside commenced singing this song. The other party stopped to listen and thus allowed time for the MacGregors to escape by the back of the house.

"The language is highly metaphorical ; but not so much so as to prevent our unravelling the meaning. A party of MacGrigors called Dark-blue Stags were startled by their enemies at the riverside and chased to the Glen of Mists. One of their number a kinsman of the songstress, by whom he is designated the 'Graceful Bird' was murdered by them. The arrow wound she speaks of having received is evidently not a physical wound at all, but the pain of mind she experienced in consequence. Reciting this to the murderers, she could not possibly even with all the protection which her womanhood gave her use plainer language."

GLENORCHY MACGRIGOR'S SONG.

All alone I am seated
By the side of the highway
Watching for some coming wanderer
From Ben Cruachan the misty.
My hope is he can give me
Some sure news of ClanGrigor.
With whom spent I last Sunday
In kinship and greeting.

Cha d'fhuair mi d'an sgeul,
 Ach iad bhì'n dé air na sraithibh,
 Thall 's a bhos mu Loch-fine,
 Ma 's fìor mo luchd-bratha
 Ann an Clachan-an-Diseart
 'G òl fìon air na maithibh,
 Bha Griogair mór, ruadh ann
 Lamh chruaidh air chul claidhimh.

Agus Griogair mór, meadhrach
 Ceann-feadhn ar luchd-tighe,
 Mhic an fhir á Srath-Arduil,
 Bhiodh na bàird ort a tathaich.
 Bheireadh greis air a chlarsaich
 'S air an taileasg gu aighear,
 'S a sheinneadh an fhidheal
 'Chuireadh fiughair fo mhnathan

S ann a rinn sibh 'n t-sithionn anmoch
 Anns a' ghleann am bi'n ceathach,
 Dh'fhag sibh an t-Eoin boidhaech -
 Air a' mhointich 'na laidhe.
 Na stairsnich air feithe,
 'N déigh a reubadh le claidheamh,
 'S ann a thog sibh greigh dhù-ghorm
 Bho luban na h-abhann.

Ann am bothan na dìge,
 Ghabh sibh dìon air an rathad,
 Far an d'fhag sibh mo bhiodag
 Agus criosd mo bhuilg-shaighead.
 Gur i saighead na h-araich
 So tharmaich am leathar,
 Chaidh saighead am shliasaid
 Crann fiar air dhroch shnai theadh.

Gu'n seachnadh Rìgh nan Dul sibh
 Bho fhudar caol neimhe
 Bho shradagan teine
 Bho pheileir 's bho shaighead.

No news has since reached me
Of how they are faring,
Save, yestreen, that they wandered
Up and down through the Strath-glades.
At Lochfyne they were heard of
If true be my story ;
At Clachan Discart they were drinking
Goodly wine with the Chieftains.

There was 'mongst them red Grigor
Truest hand behind broadsword
And big Gregor the light-hearted,
Of our horsemen the leader.
Son of him from Strathardle
On whom bards would be calling
For a lilt on harp tuneful,
Then awhile at backgammon.

He could play a strain cheerysome
On the violin so sweetly
As would fill the fair maidens
With joy and with gladness.
Late at even you were hunting
In the glen where the mist wreathes.
There on the top of the moss-bog,

Stretched out on the soft bog,
There he lay as you sped him,
With claymore cruelly tearing
His comeliest person.
From the loop where the stream bends,
You the dark-blue stags startled ;
In the bothy by the dyke's side
You took shelter in passing.

There left you my true dirk,
With the belt of my quiver ;
'Twas the arrow of slaughter
That piercéd my body.

History of the Clan Gregor

Bho sgian na roinn' caoile
 'S bho fhaobhar caol claidhimh,
 'S ann bha bhuidheann gun còmhradh
 Di-domhnuich 'm braigh bhaile.

'S cha dean mi gair eibhinn
 'N am éiridh no laidhe,
 'S beag an t-iognadh dhomh fein sud
 'S mi an deigh mo luchd-tighe.
 'S beag an t-iognadh dhomh fein sud
 'S mi an deigh mo luchd-tighe,
 'S mi'm shuidhe'n so 'm onar
 Air combnard an rathaid.

Through my thigh went that arrow,
And wounded me sorely ;
Whose shaft was but ill-trimmed,
Both crooked and tearing.

May the God of all Nature
Thou preserve from grained powder
From the sharp flashes flaming,
From bullet and arrows.
O'er my face then shall henceforth
No laugh flit in dimples
Nor smile of heart gladness
At morn or night-fall.

Chapter XVIII

Death of Drummondernocho

WE now come to the darkest page of our history, the murder of John Drummond of Drummondernocho; a crime which we would fain believe to have been perpetrated by men of another name. Of this deed there are several different accounts which agree in attaching the blame to the Clan Gregor. The following is taken from the "Black Book of Taymouth":—

"Bond to pursue the Clan M^cGregour for the murder of Johne Drummond of Drumnevenocht.

The Record contained in the Register of the Privy Council is more detailed and gives a full list of those of the Clan who were proscribed, which is here copied for genealogical studies:—

"1589-90. Feb. 4. At Edinburgh.

"The Lords of secret Council being creditably informed of the cruel and mischievous proceeding of the wicked Clan Gregor, so long continuing in blood, slaughters, herships manifest reiffs, and stouths, committed upon his highness peacable and good subjects, inhabiting the countries next the Braes of the highlands these many years bygone, but specially how after the cruel murder of umqule John Drummond his Majesty's proper Tenant and one of his Foresters of Glenartney committed upon the _____ day of _____ last by past, by certain of the said Clan, by the counsel and determination of the whole, avowing to defend the authors there of whoever would pursue for revenge of the same, when the said John was occupied in seeking of venison to his Highness at command of Patrick Lord Drummond, Stewart of Stratherne and principal Forester of Glenartney The Queen his Majesties dearest spouse being then shortly looked for to arrive in this realm. In the above document it must be observed that the "hand" of the murdered man is mentioned instead of the "head," an important difference in refutation of the Ardvorlich legend.

The Princess of Denmark sailed for Scotland in August 1589, when the ship was beaten back by storms. The King eventually embarked on the 22nd October to fetch his bride; the royal marriage took place on the 23rd November, the winter was spent in Denmark, and the royal pair landed at Leith on the 1st May 1590.

From the "Chartulary":—

"1590. April 7. James Commendator of Inchaffray,¹ brother of Lord Drummond was by the High Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh called to produce letters at the instance of the Kin and friends of the late John Drummond of Drummondernoch to be surety of a considerable number of the individuals of the ClanGregor who had been denounced nominatim by the Secret Council 4. The foregoing papers give a very circumstantial account of the murder, although without any details, and lay it to the charge of some of the to the hill, where according to the tradition she remained for some time amongst the Deer until her Husband found her one night in a hut and took her home next morning. That according to the same tradition a poor woman of Glencoe a Druidess, threw a spell over the Forrester which deprived him of the power of seeing an enemy : owing to which spell he would not believe his servant when he informed him that he saw the MacIans approaching and advised him to fly when he saw danger. That when Ardvorlich's Lady was brought back she had a stone in her hand, which is called the Red Stone, but which the deponent who had seen it thought resembled a chrystal, and he knows that people from a distance are still in the practice of coming to Ardvorlich and taking away water in bottles for the cure of their cattle, after the same being stirred about with the stone to which there was a chain attached, And being interrogated whether he had not heard that the above slaughter was imputed to the Macgregors Depones that he heard so only lately having heard of old what he has already deponed to. And being asked what impression that late report made upon him? Depones that he considers it to be a lie, never having heard of any enmity between the Drummonds and the Macgregors but on the contrary that they were in friendship. That the Deponent also heard the foregoing tradition from other people, and particularly about thirty years ago from John MacGregor who resided at Meovey in the parish of Comrie, and who died about four years ago aged nearly 100. That he has heard of the M^cIans and some of the Glengarry MacDonalds headed by Glengarry's Brother whose title was Achuanie, having plundered Breadalbane and of the MacEans having once plundered Glenlyon, which was the cause of the enmity between the Campbells and the Glencoe people. And being asked if ever he heard of the Forresters head having been brought to the Kirktown of Balquhidder and tossed about by the Macgregors, Depones that he never did and that it was impossible that he ever could have heard it as he had never heard the murder imputed to the Macgregors, excepting very lately as before mentioned, and if such a remarkable circumstance had happened he thinks the tradition could not have passed away. And being asked if he had ever heard of seventeen or any other number of Macgregors being hanged upon one tree in Balquhidder? Depones that he never heard of such a report, and considers it highly increditable that if such a circumstance had happened, the tradition could have died away, and all this is truth as he shall answer to God."

Traditions about death of Drummondearnach 215

That his father was born in 1701 and lived to the age of 77, That the invariable report from his infancy with regard to the slaughter of Drummond Earnach the Forester of Glenartney, which the Deponent had from his father and many others was that it was committed by the MacIans or MacDonalds of Glencoe That it was in consequence of an injury done by the Forrester to some of the Clan Ian, a party of whom came down for the purpose of putting him to death. And being examined with regard to the other particulars in the preceding Deposition and afterwards having heard the same read over to him Depones and concurs with regard to the servant running off from the Forrester when the MacIans approached : of his head being cut off and carried to Ardvorlich : of the Forrester's sister the landlady entertaining them : of the caiper being put to the head in her sight ; of her going to the hill distracted when she saw her brother's head ; of her being taken back by her husband, and of the spell or witchcraft which prevented the Forrester from seeing his enemies ; Depones that the preceding tradition is more familiar to the Deponent from the circumstance, that his great grandfather by his father's side was a son of the daughter of the Lady Ardvorlich who was distracted and ran off to the hill as before mentioned, and who was sister of the Forrester so put to death. Depones That he never heard of the report of the murder being imputed to the Macgregors till questioned respecting this his deposition. And which report he believes to be false having always heard that the Drummonds and Macgregors lived in a friendly way. That he has often heard that the MacIans of Glencoe were in the practice of coming down and subsisting themselves by plunder in this and the neighbouring parts of the country. And being asked if he ever heard of seventeen or any other number of Macgregors being hanged on one tree in Balquhidder Depones that he never heard of such report and he thinks it improbable from never having heard of it. And all this truth as I shall answer to God."

Traditional account of the murder of Drummond Earnach :—

"Balquhidder 16. Dec. 1813.

"During the time that Drummond Earnach was Forrester in Glenartna two young boys named Johnstons or Clan Eoin Glencoe having gone to that place for the purpose of hunting the Deers, Drummond Earnach upon seeing them took hold of them and clipped their ears desiring them to go home, when they reached home they told what had happened to them to their friends, who being so enraged that they swore they would be revenged upon him for treating them so roughly. They immediately dispatched an old wife who went under the name of a witch to bewitch Drummond Earnach. She goes to his sister who being Lady of Ardvorlich at that time and says to her, that if she would compliment well, she would give her a piece of cloth, which being sewed to her brother's coat he would never see his enemy. The lady thinking that the old wife meant that her brother never would have an enemy, gave her some thing and accordingly the piece cloth was sewn to his coat, and shortly after this a band of Clann Eoin's friends went to Glenartna there to lay wait for Drummond Earnach, and as soon as they saw him they ran towards him his servant seeing them coming warned his master, and made off himself, Drummond Earnach not seeing any, would not follow his servant, he was seized and his head cut off."

The ghastly tale of the head having been placed on the table at Ardvorlich as related by Sir Walter Scott is repeated, adding that the lady was for a week in the forests among the deer, but was found and brought home; her child was born directly afterwards, and became a Major in the army.

The deposition is thus certified—

"We Alexander M^cNab, Lochearnhead and Robert M^cGregor Auchtow Balquhidder do affirm that we heard the above circumstances told by the people after mentioned all of them to the same purpose, Alex: M^cNab heard it from one John Carmichael Glen Dochart who died about forty years ago—from John M^cGregor Meovie east end of Lochearn where he died above three years ago and was about 98 years of age also from Lieutenant Stewart Perthshire Militia; Robert M^cGregor from his father Hugh M^cGregor."

"Manse of Balquhidder, 19 June 1817.

"Robert MacGregor an elder of the Parish of Balquhidder in which his Grandfather & Great grandfather were also elders in presence of the Rev. Alexander MacGregor Minister of the said Parish, states that since he emitted his affidavit relative to the murder of Drummond Earnach which had been unjustly ascribed to persons of the name of MacGregor he has been informed by several Natives of Lochaber that Allister MacDhuil, Paternal Brother of MacDonald of Keppoch, having conceived the design of seizing on Keppoch's lands in the minority of his three sons, went to the house of Keppoch on the pretence of visiting his nephews, on their return from school, that Alister MacDhuil was accompanied by his six sons that the servants of the family were in the fields cutting down corn, and the Boys left in the house; that their uncle and his sons taking advantage of this circumstance put the boys to death that Ian Lom a celebrated Bard, and a friend of the young men had charge of the family, and was superintending the Shearers at harvest work; that having observed Alister MacDhuil and his sons going through the motion of taking leave of the boys at the door and sometime after the departure of these men, thinking it strange that the boys did not come to see the people at work, Ian Lom went to look after them and was horrorstruck at finding them murdered that Alistair MacDhuil and his sons immediately left their country under a consciousness of the criminality of this atrocious murder that they skulked seven years in different parts of the neighbouring countries, and haunted a considerable part of that time in Perthshire and particularly near the forest of Glenartney where they were in the habit of making free with the deer; that the present Mr Stewart of Ardvorlich had informed the Declarant, that these men had built a hut in Finglen the most eastern farm of his estate very near the forest where they principally resided for two years; that the Forrester Drummond Earanach having cropped the ears of these sons of Alistair MacDhuil or of some of that tribe as a punishment for their trespasses in the forest, his own murder was the consequence of their revenge as the Declarant verily believes; that Alistair MacDhuil and his sons having afterwards returned to their own country were apprehended, and their heads thrown into a well not far from the house of Glengarry, called to this day Tobar nan ceann, or the Well of the heads, That the Declarant was credibly informed that there is a tribe of MacDonalds called Clann Dhuil; another styled Clan Fhionla and that several other tribes of MacDonalds have family patronymics; that the imputation of this murder falsely made against the Macgregors was founded on no better grounds than the circumstance of a tribe of that Clan being called Clan Duil; whereas there are many tribes in the Highlands of other surnames bearing the patronimic of Clann Duil."

The above declaration emitted and signed in presence of Alexander MacGregor, Min. of Balquhiddier.

Letter from Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie to the Rev. Alexander MacGregor, minister of Balquhiddier:—

"5. August 1820.

"Rev. dear Sir,

"From having read the 'Legend of Montrose,' containing allusions to the Children of the Mist (MacGregors) as being the perpetrators of that horrid deed mentioned therein, I am led to suppose that the author who often blends truth and fiction together, has had an erroneous account of an antient but true story handed down in the upper parts of Perth and Argyleshire from father to son, upon which he founded this part of his narrative. If my memory is correct, the story ran thus:—The MacIans of Glencoe being upon an excursion to the Lowlands, as then not uncommon, being disappointed on their expedition, of course much in want of food, in passing through the King's forest in Perthshire killed a hart or deer, the keepers with the principal, Drummond earnach as leader, apprehended the MacIans and sent them home with bloody ears, having literally cropped them, such insult being more than death was not to be forgiven, The Clan of course rushed from their mountains seized upon the unfortunate Drummond, cut off his head, came to his sister's house who ignorant of the deed and by way of Peace offering entertained them and who upon her return to the guest chamber, observed her brother's head upon the table with bread and cheese in the mouth. The consequence to the poor woman was distraction running wild with the animals of the forrest as hinted in the Legend.

"All the share the children of the Mist or M^cGregors had in these horrid transactions was perhaps over stretched hospitality in screening the MacIans till they could make their escape to their own (for those days) impregnable mountains. Having heard of late a good deal of conversation of this affair I think it right that Sir John should be informed of what was currently said of it in my younger days, My sister who is much better versed in highland story than I am joins in regard with

Letter from the Rev. Alexander Irvine, minister of Little Dunkeld, well known for his acquaintance with all Highland subjects, to Captain Donald MacGregor, 96 Reg. of Foot, Ayr, afterwards proprietor of Balnald Strathardle, Perthshire:—

"Dunkeld 12. July 1815.

"With regard to the murder of Drummond Erinach by a few MacGregors it is a made up story to answer the purpose intended, that is to deprive them of all their lands. He was murdered by the Johnsons or MacIans of Ardnamurchan, a sept of the MacDonalds who even as far down as the 1752. regularly laid the country under contribution. Being three years minister in their country, I had every opportunity of knowing the history of this roving tribe. It is well known that they came to hunt in the forest of Sechallin, Ben Douran, Cruach, and others. Walter Scott took the story as he found it and unfortunately gave celebrity to a falsehood. I have written the history of the Clan Gregor as a part of my account of the Scotch Clans in which I have endeavoured to do justice to a long oppressed though noble and generous race. If a party of the MacGregors should have in a hunting match killed a rival it would not surprise any one acquainted with the history of the age; such things happened every day, but it is enough for Clan Gregor to bear their own burdens."

The foregoing depositions are in themselves interesting, whatever weight they may be allowed to carry.

The Chief at the time of the transaction was Allaster Roy, son of the Gregor Roy who was so ruthlessly murdered by old Sir Colin Campbell, under colour of judicial execution in 1570. A sense of terrible injustice, the knowledge that his Clan could do no right in the eyes of their cruel enemies and traducers, must have most deeply goaded him if (?) he took the desperate resolution of accepting for himself and his followers the full responsibility of the foul deed, by whomsoever it might have been done. History of the Clan Gregor

And not a whisper breathed around,
And nought was heard of mortal sound,
Save for the clanking arms they bore
That rattled on the marble floor.
And each as he approached in haste,
Upon the scalp his right hand placed ;
With livid lip and gathered brow
Each uttered in turn the vow
Fierce Malcolm watch'd the passing scene,
And searched them through with glances keen ;
Then dashed a teardrop from his eye ;
Unbid it came—he knew not why.
Exulting high, he towering stood ;
'Kinsmen,' he cried, 'of Alpin's blood
And worthy of Clan Alpin's name,
Unstained by cowardice or shame,
E'en do, spare nocht, in time of ill
Shall be Clan Alpin's legend still.'"

From the "Chartulary":—

"1590. Aug. 1. Decreet Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhay in virtue of his infetment and Sasine against Alexander Roy MacGregor (Allester MacGregor of Glenstray) Donald MacIntyre and John M^capersone (Macpherson) occupiers of Stronmelochan, Patrick MacGregor V^cDonald occupier of Tullich, John dhu MacGregor and Neill MacGregor his brother, occupiers of Dowletter, Patrick MacGregor occupier of Castellan, and Patrick Oure MacGregor occupier of Derdoniche: Defenders decerned in absence to flit and remove."—Gen. Reg. Decrees of the Court of Session. Vol cxxv. fol. 216.

Allaster Roy MacGregor (VII.), eldest son of Gregor Roy nam Basan Geal, by his wife the daughter of Campbell of Glenlyon, must have been very young at the time of his father's death in 1570. Ewin MacGregor, "Tutour of Glenstray," is frequently mentioned in public documents, and as late as 1581 he was given the first place on the list; the distinctive title of Tutour was even afterwards always attached to his name. Another surviving brother of Gregor Roy's, often in the Records, was Duncan na Glen.

Allaster M^cGregour V^cDonache V^cAllester (who had one brother,¹ John dhu na Luarach, coat of mail,) appears to have been one of the best and most capable leaders the Clan ever had; brave in action and generously willing to share every peril of his people, he was truly an ideal Chief. The action he felt compelled to take in accepting the responsibility for the Drummondernoch murder proved, however, very unfortunate for the Clan, raising the whole power of even the least vindictive landlords against the MacGregors, and forming the ground of very severe enactments which speedily followed.

From the Register of the Privy Council :—

But a change came over the state of matters, and the astute Sir Duncan got apparently a hint to underlie the law himself.

On the 14th December of the same year, James Stewart of Stikkis became cautioner and surety for the Atholl Barons to compeir before the King's Majesty and Lords of Secret Council. Accordingly—

It seems a curious illustration of the times that so dreadful a murder should have been so easily passed over within about fifteen months from the date of its committal, unless a doubt existed as to the real perpetrators of it.

All seemed now peaceable, but there could not be room for the old and new inhabitants of the land. A small dispute in the meantime, illustrates this.

MACGREGOR OF ARDINCONNAL.

We have alluded in Chapter XI. to MacGregor of Ardinconnal in Dumbartonshire, where the family were settled as early as 1429. But after bringing its history down to 1544, all subsequent notices about this house have been omitted, both to avoid still further complicating the tangled thread of the General History, and also, with a view of now presenting the family in a consecutive manner, to serve as an introduction to the future troubles with the Colquhouns, which it has been stated had probably their origin in this outlying branch of the MacGregors, whose quarrels the Clan was of course bound to support.

From the "Chartulary":—

- "1545. July 27. The four merk land of Laggarie belonging in property to Patrik M^cGregour, and holding of the Earl of Lennox, and the 6 merk land of Ardinconnell, belonging to the Laird of Ardinconnell, are thus mentioned in a Charter of Queen Mary of the above, apprissing the Earl's estates for the damage done in his late rebellion, to James Stewart of Cardonald."
4. Jan. 1543-4. Reg. Mag. Sig. xxx 22. (By the laird of Ardinconnell is obviously meant the person to whom that property was assigned under redemption by MacGregor of Ardinconnell.)

"1564. Sep. 8. Of the same date. Patrik Colquhoun protests that this resignation was made 'be compulsion' in obedience to a Decreet of the Lords of Council and it should not prejudice his claim of warrandice against John Colquhoun of Luss. Accordingly infestment was given in Ardinconnal, on 6. Nov. following, to Patrik M^cGregor in liferent and to his son John in fee. (M^cAulay's letters suspended till he shall produce them to the Council.)

1592. July. Sir Humphrey Colquhoun of Luss was besieged in his castle of Bunachrea by the MacFarlanes, when the castle was burning Sir Humphrey perished in the flames as it would seem. No mention is made in the "Chartulary" that any MacGregors were concerned in this affair of which the facts are traced by two entries in the Records of The Privy Council several years later charging certain MacFarlanes with the crime. In the work, "The Chiefs of Colquhoun," to which reference has already been made,¹ the following account of the event is given from traditions current in the Colquhoun country. But it must be remembered that amidst the complaints so freely made against the ClanGregor none on this subject are to be found in public Records.

After alluding to the recent band with Ardincaple Sir William Fraser continues :—

"From these connexions and alliances of the ClanGregor, it is easy to see how they might be brought into collision with the Colquhouns, and how the growing hatred between them might ripen into a standing feud. The Colquhouns were at enmity with the Earl of Argyll, as well as with the ClanGregor; and it was the uniform polity of the Earls of Argyll to have the MacGregors always about them in such force as to enable them at will to annoy their neighbours, and to take summary vengeance on their personal enemies. 'That the Colquhouns and the MacGregors were in a manner constituted enemies to each other from the position in which the MacGregors were placed by these bonds and alliances, is confirmed by actual fact; for in the very next year after the bond made between Macaulay of Ardincaple and the MacGregors the latter² strengthened by the Macfarlanes, came into collision with the Colquhouns. In July 1592, a body of the Macfarlanes and the MacGregors descending from the mountains, committed extensive depredations upon the fertile lands of Luss, which were now ripening for the harvest. to repel the aggressors, Sir Humphrey collected together a number of his vassals, and was joined by several neighbouring landed proprietors. The hostile parties met, and a sanguinary conflict which lasted till nightfall ensued. Sir Humphrey's assailants were more than a match for him and he was forced to retreat. He betook himself to his castle of Bannachra, a stronghold which had been erected by the Colquhouns at the foot of the northside of the hill of Bennibuie, at the south end of the parish of Luss. But here the Knight did not find the shelter he expected. A party of the Macfarlanes and Macgregors pursued him and laid siege to his castle. One of the servants who attended the Knight was of the same surname as himself. He had been tampered with by the assailants of his master and he treacherously made him their victim. The servant, while conducting his master to his room up a winding stair of the castle made him, by preconcert, a mark for the arrow of the clan who pursued him, by throwing the glare of a paper torch upon his person when opposite a loophole. This afforded a ready aim to the besiegers whose best bowmen watched for the opportunity. A winged arrow darted from its string with a steady aim, pierced the unhappy knight to the heart, and he fell dead on the spot. The fatal loophole is still pointed out but the stair, like its unfortunate Lord, has crumbled into dust.¹

“Traditions regarding these lawless proceedings still linger in the district around the ruins of Bannachra. The memory of the traitor servant is still held in odium, and his descendants are known to this day as the ‘Traitor Colquhouns.’ While it is plain how Sir Humphrey was assassinated, it is unknown by whose hand the deadly arrow was actually shot.¹

A contemporary chronicler in a work “Diary of Robert Birrell Burgess of Edinburgh” charges a younger brother with having been executed for murdering “the Laird of Luss,” but there is no other evidence in support of it. Sir Humphrey was only 27 at the time of his death. He was himself “at the Horn” for non-appearance to answer for the slaughter of William Brisbane of Barnishill.

From the “Chartulary” :—

“1593. May 3. Exemption to the Lairds of Luss and Ardincaple, Anent our Sovereign Lords letters raised at the instance of Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, and Alan (Aulay M^eAulay of Ardincaple evidently reconciled to Luss.) making mention that where Robert Galbraith of Culcreugh by the special devise and Counsell of George Buchanan of that Ilk has lately purchased a commission of Justiciary from his Majesty for purduitt of the ClanGregor their reseters and assisters, with fire and sword, which commission the said Robert has not purchased upon an intention to attempt anything against the ClanGregor but under collour thereof to extend their hatred against the said complainers, with all extremit and under pretence of searching and seeking of the MacGregors to assiege their houses, &c. In consequence of this complaint Culchreuchs commission is taken from him.

“1593. May 8. Alexander Colquhoun of Luss besides finding caution conforme to the General Bond (i.e. Act of Parliament 1587.) Binds himself and others not to intercommune with any of the names of Buchanan, MacGregor, or MacFarlane. Robert Galbraith eventually comes under a similar Bond on the 20. May.”

Without direct evidence against the Luss Tradition that the MacGregors were art and part with the Macfarlanes in the Raid of Bentoig, the above excerpts do not agree with the tone of rancour that might have been expected had there been a Blood Feud.

About this time a list of the principal men of the ClanGregor belonging to the three chief houses was made out, apparently by order of the Government, in compliance, doubtless, with the scheme laid down in the General Band of 1587. An original list has been preserved as a State paper, which was formerly in the Collections of Lord Hopetoun, and is now in the British Museum. Mr MacGregor Stirling copied this document (which he states had been discovered in a "private collection") more than sixty years ago, in one of his MS. genealogical volumes¹ with the following remark:—

"It is a formal schedule, which bears that it was handed by the Clerk of the Register to Sir John Murray (afterwards 1st Earl of Tullibardine) for revision and correction. Sir John deletes some of the names, and supplies others. The name of Duncan Abroch had been omitted and is added by Sir John Murray under the House of Gregor M^cEan. but he did not correct the patronymics of Duncan Glen the uncle of Allaster of Glenstray. The first list in the letter is genealogical, while in the second the individuals are arranged without regard to descent."

Letter (precise date not known²) from Sir Alexander Hay, Clerk of the Secret Council, to Sir John Murray of Tullibardine, Kt. :—

"Endorsed 'To the lard of Tullibardin anent Hielandis'

3. Donald Dow M^cCondoquhy V^cAlister, probably of the Ardlarich family.—See No. 8.

² Reference is made to the Three Houses in an "Offer" by Glenstray, dated July 1599.—See chapter xxii.

³ Properly D. Glen M^cAllaster V^cEane V^cEwine.

The numbers are here added to connect such names as appear in both lists.

* These obtained a remission, 4th June 1592.

*4. Roro (repeated in 2nd list). In a MS. history (to be given later) he is called VII. of Roro.

5. Gregour M^cNeill in Ardeonaig. Twenty pound land at an early period in the possession of the old Earls of Lennox, the western half devolved later on Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Murdoch Menteith, wife of Napier of Murchiston. As the Gregour M^cNeill in 2nd list was also under the Laird of Murchiston, he was probably identical with No. 5. Ardeonaig was afterwards held by a family of MacGregors till the end of the 17th century, when it fell to the Campbells of Edinchip, and eventually to the Campbells of Breadalbane.—Taken from the “Lairds of Loch Tay Side” (repeated in 2nd list).

*6. John dow, brother to Gregor No. V., who is known to have had a brother John, mentioned in list 1589. They were sons of Duncan, and may have had a brother Duncan also.

7. This William’s last name is M^cAne (or Ian) Moyl (bald), therefore he was probably related to No. 20. Also probably occupied Stuenochane-Rannoch.—See page 242.

8. John dow M^cCondoquhy Vic Alicher occupied the 6 merk land of Ardlarich in Rannoch, the addition “Keir” may have been an error; it is, however, remarkable that he is here placed with Roro, whereas the Ardlarich family are believed to have branched off from Glenstray.

9. Gregour M^cAne (Brackley in Glenurchay had by this time devolved on a cadet of Duncan Ladosach’s family). Gregor was Captain of the Castle of Glenurchay, under Sir Colin, 1570.

*10. Gregour, Greginshawch, i.e., Craiginshache or Craggan. There was a lard called Craggan on Aldeonaig.

11. Duncan Abrach had obtained Corriecharmaig in the Braes of Glenurchy from Glenurchay by the mediation of Locheil (“Baronage”) (repeated in 2nd list).

*12. Duncan Bane M^cRob M^cGregor in Stukenroy (repeated in 2nd list, also in Craigrostan, 1583).

*13. Alester Galt, brother of Duncan na Glen and uncle of Glenstray.

*14. Alester Pudrayt (Pudrach from Balquhidder). Although here mentioned as under the Laird of Weyme (Chief of Menzies) he is mentioned, July 29th, 1595, as under Stewart of Grandtully.

Various transactions with regard to Allaster MacGregor of Glenstray about this time are somewhat complicated.

From the “Chartulary” :—

“1590. Aug. 1. Decreet from the Court of Session obtained by Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhy in virtue of his infestment and sasine against Alexander Roy Macgregor, Donald MacIntyre and John Macpersone Occupiers of Stronmelochan, Patrick M^cGregor V^cDonald occupier of Tullich, John dow M^cGregor and Neill his brother, occupiers of Dowletter, Patrick M^cGregor occupier of Castellan, and Patrick ower MacGregor occupier of Derndoniche, charging them to flit and remove from said lands. Decerned against them in absence. N.B. The above lands are all parts of the 20 shilling lands of Glenstray on which neither Allaster MacGregor nor his father Gregor had been feudally invested. Hence it was possible to eject MacGregor and his subtenants from them.

- " 1594-5. March 17. Act in favour the Laird of Glenurquhy. Although his desire had been found reasonable, yet, because the said letters were not then produced to verify the premisses the giving out of the said Declarator had been suspended till the letters should be produced. This having been done by Sir Duncan it is decerned and declared, that the said petitioner and his cautioners shall not be answerable for the said Alexander in time coming.

The above action at law is interesting, as shewing the working of the heavy responsibility which landlords incurred by the enactments of the General Bond, which obliged even those proprietors who might be on friendly terms with their MacGregor tenants to protect themselves by giving them notice to remove. And, at the same time, the policy of the Crown in selling letters and commissions against the Clan Gregor naturally had an effect the reverse of pacific on the country in general. There were numerous small encounters; no honest calling was left open for the Clansmen, and, being from their adventurous nature always ready for a fray, their services were gladly secured for other people's quarrels or skirmishes.

"1595. June 8. Robert Robertstone of Strowane and his curators obtain Decreet from the Court of Session charging John Dow, Duncan and Allaster M^cAllaster alias M^cGregours, to flit and remove from his lands of Stronfernan, Lagfernan, and Vindevoir in Barony of Fernan.

The following letter from King James VI. to M^cIntosh was copied from the original in the archives of Moy by Sir John MacGregor Murray. It shows the anger which possessed the mind of the King—a feeling which had been kindled, and doubtless carefully nurtured, by those whose interest it was to get rid of the Clan and enjoy their escheats:—

"1596. March 30. James R. Richt traist friend we greet you hairtlie well. Haveing hard be report of the late preiffe gevin be you of your willing disposition to our service in prosequiting of that wicked race of MacGregour we haif thocht meit hereby to signifie unto you that we accompt the same

From Halyrud hous the penult day of March in the yeir 1696."

"(signed) JAMES VI."

(The correct month is supplied by a Latin MS. in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, which makes mention of the 'very polite letter' sent to M^cIntosh. The royal mandate was not, however, carried into execution, as Duncan was alive eight years later.)

“ 1566. July 24. Precept of a Remission¹ to Allaster M^cGregour of Glenstray and all persons of his surname of M^cGregour, and their friends, kin, tenants servants and Dependens, for being art and part of the cruel murder and slaughter of umple John Drummond of Drummenerenoch, committed by the said Alexander and his foresaid Clan in the month of Jan. 1589. and for all other committed by the said Alexander or by any of his surname of M^cGregour.”—Privy Seal lxviii 199.

N.B. A previous and equally complete remission had been granted on the 4. Jan. 1591-2.

“ 1596. October. John Campbell of Ardkinglas made a complaint that his wife whilst travelling peaceably home was set upon by a number of men ‘armed with weapons at the special sending and hounding of the Earl of Argyle and carried off her horses and those of her servants &c. and compellit every one of them to scourge utheris with belts and brydillis, in maist cruell maner.’ And ‘forceit the said Dame Jane to returne back again on her feit.’ Several MacGregors are enumerated in this affair in which another MacGregor one of the complainers servants was taken away captive and carried to ‘the place of Inueraree’ where he was kept for three or four days.”

“ Nov. 19. Letters of Horning recorded at Perth. Because by contract dated

¹ This Remission, of course, implies that the Chief and Clan were implicated in the Murder of Drummondernach, but it does not prove the truth of the accusation.

1 & 2. Feb. 1590 they became bound not to commit slaughter or felony (see contract of that date.) and 'Albeit it be of verity that Johnne M^cGregour brother german to the said Allester M^cGregour of Glenstray Johnne Dow M^cEwin V^cGregour and Donald Dow M^cAllester with their accomplices stole from Graham of Fintrie, yet Allaster Roy M^cGregour and his Cautioners refuse to apprehend them.'—Reg. of Hornings, Perth.

It must have been very strange to the turbulent Chief to be toned down into a docile courtier in the "company" of King James, though it was a merciful chance for him had it been possible for his Clan to have remained at peace. But doubtless neither opportunities nor wily tempters were wanting to allure them onwards to break the very insecure truce.

From the “Red and White Book of Menzies” :—

- “Holyrood House, 25. Jan. 1599. “Sep. 6. The entrie of Makgregour prorogat untill the 15 Nov. nixt.”¹

Although at this time the King and Council do not seem to have wished to press hardly on the Clan, and evidently had a respect, and perhaps regard, for MacGregor of Glenstray, yet the severe laws which had been devised against Highlanders who were unquiet (for in this respect the General Band threatened them all) fell with great weight on the MacGregors. The laws requiring superiors and landlords to be personally answerable for those living on their lands forced even friendly neighbours, such as we must esteem Sir John Murray of Tullibardine and James Drummond the Commendator of Inchaffray, to prosecute the prescribed race, and drive them from one refuge to another till they had not a single resource left, and under such circumstances it was not surprising that their hand should be against every man, and that even the best efforts of their Chief should fail.

In the introduction to the sixth volume of the Register of the Privy Council of Scotland which has been published, the following remarks occur:—

“Other entries bring out the ominous fact that of all the Highland clans the Macgregors were now the objects of most unremitting attention on the part of the Government. While other more distant Clans were lawless enough, the lawlessness of the MacGregors of the LochLomond country, whether from their comparative nearness or for other reasons exposing them to special dislike, was the most heard of, in the privy Records, and while we have but glimpses of Makenzie of Kintail, or Macleod of Dunvegan, or some other of the greater chiefs as moving about in their distant parts of the map, hardly to be reached by Government commands; or missives, the poor Chief of the transgressors is kept constantly in our sight walking

1600. King James VI. XV. November 1600

ACT anent removing and extinguishing of deadly feud :—

“Our Sovereigne Lord and hail estates of parliament presently convened for removing of the present feuds that abounds within the Realme Finds it meet and expedient that the parties be charged to compeir before his Highness and secret Council at sik days as shal be thought expedient to submit to tua or three friends on either side or to subscribe ane submission formed and sent by his Majesty to them to be subscribed. Whilkis friends by their acceptatioun shall be bound either to decerne within the space of thretty days after they have accepted, or else to agree at their first meeting, on ane oversman wha shall decerne within that space, whilk if they cannot do, they shall within the foresaid thretty days report the ground and cause of their disagreement to his Majesty and sik specials of his council as his Highness shall find least partial and suspect (Whaes Majesty by the advice of the Estates here present is declared to be overs-man in the matter) And failing that the friends arbitrators either decerne, or report not, within the foresaid space after their acceptation everie one of them by this authority of this present act to incur the pain of one thousand pounds to be employed to his Majesty's use. And because all feuds are ane of thir three natures, namely that there is either slaughter upon neither side or slaughter upon ane side only or else slaughter upon both sides the parties in the first may be commanded to agree, due satisfaction being offered and performed at the sight of friends and overs-man in manner foresaid Where there is slaughter upon both sides his Majesty may by rigour and equality of justice, compell them to agree, due satisfaction being made on either side according to the quality of the offence and persons offended ; where the slaughter is only on one side the party grieved cannot refuse in reason to submit in manner foresaid all quarrell he can beare to any person innocent, Justice being made patent to him against the guilty specially he being ordained by this present Act to persew nane uther but the guilty and that by the Law. And the party so peresewed not to beare quarrel for it, but to defend in lawful manner. And that all quarrels shall cease against ilk as shall be lawfully peresewed in this forme either

Provyding that if the said persewer satisfie the ordinance of this present act and be delayed either by ane continuation of the diet by warrand of the Prince or by the dilatour defences proponed by the pannell for eliding of the final tryell of the persuit In that case the prescription nawise to run against the persewer, having done his possible diligence in maner foresaid And because the guiltines of crymes consists not only in the persons of the actual committers thereof, but also in the authors, causers and mivers of the samin to be committed wha are art part and gilty of the said fact where na publick knowledge nor certane tryell is had, His Majesty and Estaitis nowyse willing that neither the authors nor actours of sik heinous crymes escape the dew punishment through obscurity and laik of publik knowledge thereof Declares that the parties offended doing thier diligence as said is against the actual and knawn committers of the said crymes and satisfying this Act anent their reconciliation with all other persons shall in nowyse be prejudged of their action competent against sik persons of whaes giltiness they shall hereafter get knowledge provyding that they shall bear no fead against the said suspect persons whill first after sufficient information obtained they raise their letters for summonding of the saids parties to underlye the law and either make them fugitive or otherwyse obtaine ther persute decided. And further the prescription of this present act shall in nowyse militate aginst any party whaes actions are already submitted to ane langer day, nor is prescribed in this act Provyding that the party doe his diligence in maner above written within forty days after the expiring of the said submission And to the intent that justice be na occasion to breed farther trouble every party shall come to the town accompanied allanerlie with twentyfour persons where bath they and thir company shall keepe their ludging to the hour of cause. At the quhilk first the ane and then the other shall be brought out by the town (guard?) in Armes accompanied from their ludging to the bar with the number presrived to their rank by act of parliament. The contravener whereof if he be persewer shall tyne his persute in tyme comming and if he be defender he shall be denounced rebell as presumed guilty, and refusing lawful triall. And for staying all deadly feads in tyme cumming it shall not be lawful to the persewer to invade, persew, bear fead, or quarrel against any friend of the offender innocent or not accused and convict of the cryme under the pain of tynsell of his action and persute against the guilty and to be compelled to submit with the offenders self Reserving alwyse to his Majesty his action against him for the cryme Lyke as the friends of the giltly person being convict of the cryme and fugitive from the law, shall not bear quarel for his persute be law neither maintein, supplie nor reset him under the paines contened in the act against resettters of fugitives and rebels. And in case any of the friends of the guilty persons reset him in contempt of the present act and others his Highness Lawes, the partie grieved, assisted with his Highnes Advocat, shall onely persew the resettters by ordour of law without convocation or fead, grudge, or quarrell to be borne against him therefore otherwise under the paine of tynsel of his said lawful action in all tyme comming. And to this ordour before specified the hail nobilitie and estaites here present have given their consent and approbatioun and sworne to conforme them thereto in all feads whilkis shall fall out in tyme comming. And this present Act nowyse to militat in sik cases where the party offender is denounced rebell or shall happen hereafter to be fugitive and put to the horne, for slaughter or other odious capital crymes, during the tyme of their rebellion. And to the intent these present articles may have the better effect and be the mair willingly embraced by his Majesty's hail subjects, his Highnes of his proper motive and gracious inclination to justice, quyetness and well of his people, solemnly declared and faithfully promised in presence of the saidis estaits that for slaughter and other odious crymes to be hereafter committed his Heighness shall grant no respit, remission, pardon, nor oversight at any tymes efter, albeit the parties transact and agree themselves, till these inveterate and damnable customes of the saids heynous crymes be rooted out and altogether suppressed ; whilkis articles above written in the hail heads and poijnts of the samyne our Soveragne Lord and Estaites foresaid presently convened, ratifies, approves and confirms and ordains the samine to have the strength, force and effect of ane law in all tyme comming &a.

Perhaps no Statute Book contains a more singular regulation, giving the power of life and death into the hands of Argyll and even guarding against the possibility of Royal mercy. Moreover, it is made retrospective, although fortunately excluding the murder of Drummonderinach, the remission for which was dated July 1596, a month before the limit of former complaints.

“1602. The Earl of Argyll had become bound in 20,000 merks that he and those for whom he is answerable should observe good rule in the country and satisfy parties skaithed, Since then the Earl had obtained a commission of lieutenantancy against the ClanGregour dated in March 1601, & still undischarged, empowering him to take surety of the Clan for their good behaviour in future. In accordance with this commission he had convened before him at Stirling the Laird of M^cGregour, and all the principals of the branches of that name, and thus having them ‘all undir his power’; either took or should have taken ample surety from them, Yet though the said commission is in full force, the said ClanGregour ‘has bene and ar als insolent and of als wicked and inhappie a dispositioun as they wer at any time preceeding, and hes committit not onlie oppin and avowit heirschippis and depredationis upoun fair daylicht upoun divers of his Heynes guid subjectis, as namely upoun the Laird of Luss and Buchannane bot alsua they commit daylie prevey stouthis and robberies in all pairtis quhair they may find the commoditie of thair pray.’ . . . Chapter XXIII

Battle of Glenfruin

FROM the "Baronage," continued from Chapter XVI. :—

"XVI. Alexander MacGregor of that Ilk, a man of determined and martial spirit. He fought the memorable battle of Glenfruin, against the Colquhouns, Buchannans, Græmes, anno 1602.

"We have hereto subjoined a full account of this affair, faithfully translated from a Latin history of the family of Sutherland, written by Mr Alexander Ross, Professor in the University of Aberdeen, anno 1631 : by which it plainly appears how grossly this unfortunate Clan have been represented and abused."

Although the differences are but slight, it may be better here to give the published version of Sir Robert Gordon's history, which is very nearly similar.¹

"Extract from the 'Genealogical History of the Erldom of Sutherland from its origen to the year of God 1630.' written by Sir Robert Gordon of Gordonstoun, Baronet with a continuation to the year 1651. published from the Original Manuscript. Edinburgh 1818. Folio pages 244-247 :—

"In lent, the yeir of God 1602., ther happened a great tumult and combustion in the west of Scotland, betuein the Laird of Lus (Chieff of the surname of Colquhoun, and Alexander Mackgregor (Chieftane of the ClanGregar). Ther had ben formerlie some rancour among them, for divers mutuall harships and wrongs done on either syd ; first by Luss his freinds, against some of the Clangregar, and then by John Mackgregar (the brother of the forsaid Alexander Mackregar) against the Laird of Luss, his dependers and tennents. And now Alexander M^cGregar

¹ A MS. Note in the Family Edition of Douglas's "Baronage," probably by Mr MacGregor Stirling, adds Mr Ross, who seems to have freely, and with some slight variations, translated into Latin Sir Robert Gordon of Gordonstoun's "History of the Earldom of Sutherland," written the year before, i.e. 1630. Other accounts are added in Appendix.

(being accompanied with 200 of his kin and freinds) came from the Rannoch into the Lennox, to the Laird of Lus his owne bounds, with a resolution to tak away these dissensions and jars by the mediation of freinds. In this meantyme the Laird of Luss doth assemble all his pertakers and dependers, with the Buchannans and others, to the number of 300 horsemen and 500 foott; intending that iff the issue of their meitting did not answer his expectation, he might inclose the enemies within his cuntry, and so overthrow them. Bot the Clangregar being vpon their guard, it happened otherwise; for presentlie after that the meitting dissolued, the Laird of Luss, thinking to tak his enemies at vnawars, persued them hastylie and eagerlye at Glen-Freon. Mackregar had his company pairted in tuo; the most pairt he led himselff, the rest he committed to the charge of and conduct of his brother John, who drew a compas about, and invaded the Laird of Luss his company when they least expected. The combat wes foughten with great courage; In end, the Clangregar prevailed, chased ther enemies, killed divers gentlemen, and some burgesses of the toun of Dumbarton, with 200 others and took divers prisoners. Of the Clangregar (which is almost a wonder) tuo onlie wes slain; John Mackregar (the brother of Alexander) and another; but divers of them wer hurt.

“The report of this combat and victorie came to the king’s ears at Edinburgh, where eivin score bloodie shirts¹ (of those that were slain in that skirmish) were presented to his Mâtie, who wes therupon exceedingly incensed against the Clangregar, having none about the King to plead their cause, which proved hurtfull to them, almost to the rwyne of thet famelie and surname; for the King afterward caused proclaime them rebels, directed commissions and lettres of intercomuning against them, forbidding any of his leiges to harbor them. At last he employed the Earl of Argyle and the Campbells against them, who persued them divers tymes; and at Bentoik² where Robert Campbell (the Laird of Glen Vrqhie his sone) accompanied with some of the Clanchamron, Clanab, and Clanronald, to the number of tuo hundred chosen men, fought against thriescore of the Clangregar; in which conflict tuo of the Clangregar wer slain, to witt, Duncan Aberigh (one of the Chieftanes) and his sone Duncan. Seaven gentlemen of the Campbells syd were killed ther, though they seemed to have the victorie. So after much slaughter, many skirmishes, and divers slights vsed against the Clangregar, in end they subdued them, by the death of many of them and ther followers, and no lesse (iff not farr greater) slaughter of the Campbells. Then commissions wer sent thorow the Kingdome, for fying the receptors and harbourers of the Clangregar, and for punishing such as did intercommoun with them; all which fynes wer given by his Mâtie to the Earle of Argyle, and converted to his vse and benefit, as a recompense of that service.

² See later, in 1611.

“After many severall changes of fortune, Alexander Mackgregar rendered himself to the Earle of Argyle, vpon condition that he wold suffer him to goe saiflie into England to King James, to let his Matie know the true state of their bussines from the beginning; and in pledge of his returne agane to the Earle of Argyle, he gave him threttie of the cheifest men, and of best reputation among the Clangregar, to remain in Argyle his custodie till his return from England. Mackgregar wes no sooner at Bervick, vpon his journey to London bot, he wes brought back again to Edinburgh by the Earle of Argyle, and ther, by his meanes, execute, together with the thretty pledges befor mentioned; whereby he thought not onlie to pafeife all these broills, bot also to extinguish vtterlie the name of Clangregar; yit he wes deceaved, for now agane the Clangregar are come almost to their former vigor, and Argyle reaped small credet by this service.”

The notes in the “Baronage” may still serve as a comment on the foregoing.

“Though this account differs greatly from Mr George Crawford’s history of the family of Colquhoun; yet whether that account written by an impartial author, within less than 30 years after the affair happened, when the whole transaction was fresh in everybody’s memory, or that written above 100 years thereafter, when many of the facts must have been forgotten, deserves most to be believed, is submitted to the judgment of our readers.”

Traditional account of one of the incidents which led to the Battle of Glenfruin :—

“Before Marshal Wade paved the way for carriers and stage-coaches, the Highlanders received all their little necessaries and luxuries through the hands of pedlars, who made regular visits to one or other of the large towns, and brought back in their packs the articles chiefly in demand at home. The pedlars as a class, were of great importance to the whole community, and Highland faith and hospitality guaranteed to them security and good reception wherever they went. Two pedlars of the M^cGregors of Dunan, in the Braes of Rannoch, were benighted while on the way home from Glasgow, on the property of Sir Humphrey Colquhoun of Luss. They asked hospitality which was refused. This churlishness was owing to the quarrels of the Colquhouns with their neighbours, the M^cGregors of Glengyle; but the Colquhouns in setting limits to the hospitality asked, so far violated the conventional and hereditary code of Highland morality, that the pedlars deemed themselves justified in taking what was refused. They kindled a fire in an unoccupied sheiling-house, and taking a wedder from the fold, killed it and feasted on its carcase.

Unluckily for them, the wedder was the most marked animal in the fold. It was black all but the tail, which was white. In the morning, the shepherds missed at once 'Mult dubh an earbhail ghil'—the black wedder with the white tail. The pedlars were at once suspected, pursued, captured, brought back, and hanged without delay. The MacGregors could not tamely pass over such an affront. Alastair of Glenstrae Chief of the Clan with about 300 men left Rannoch in the beginning of the year 1602 and encamped on the Colquhoun Marches. He proposed an accommodation, on condition that the Colquhouns acknowledged their fault and made reparation to the friends of the deceased by paying the blood 'eric.' Sir Humphrey scorned the offers of peace."—From the "Lairds of Glenlyon," pages 20-21.

The other side of the conflict now claims attention, and it will be easiest found in the "Chiefs of Colquhoun."¹

First in point of chronology it may be well to take the following excerpt:—

"Among the Luss papers there are lists of articles stolen by the MacGregors from the Colquhouns in the year 1594, and in other years previous to 1600 and these lists show how much the Colquhouns had suffered from the MacGregors. But in 1602, the MacGregors made more formidable inroads into the lands of Luss, spreading consternation among the inhabitants. Complaints were made against them by the Laird of Luss to King James, upon which his Majesty dispensing with the provisions of an Act of Parliament, forbidding the carrying of arms, granted permission to him and his tenants to wear various kinds of offensive weapons. The royal letter granting him this liberty is in the following terms:—

"Rex,

"We vnderstanding that sindrie of the disorderit thevis and lymmares of the Clangregour, with utheris thair complices, dalie makis incursionis vpon, and within the boundis and landis pertening to Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, steillis, reiffis, and away takis, diuers great heirschippis fra him and his tenentis lykas they tak greater bauldnes to continew in thair said stouth and reaff, becaus they ar enarmit with all kynd of prohibite and forbidden wapynniss. JAMES R.'

"The right to carry arms thus granted to the Laird of Luss and his retainers, so far from inspiring the MacGregors with terror seems rather to have inflamed their resentment against the Colquhouns and proved, there is reason to fear, the immediate occasion of the disastrous conflict at Glenfinlas and Glenfruin which followed.

"The Laird of Luss made a complaint in Nov. 1602 if not earlier against the Earl of Argyle, as the King's lieutenant in the bounds of the Clangregour, for permitting them and others to commit outrages upon him and his tenants. The Lord High Treasurer and the King's Advocate had before 30. Nov. that year, prosecuted Argyll for certain alleged atrocities of that Clan, of which the only one specified is said to have been committed 'on the lairds of Luss and Buchannan.' Argyll and his sureties in the bond which as King's lieutenant he had given to the government, not having appeared before the Council in obedience to the summons issued against them, were fined in terms of the bond; but he was assoilzied from the charge brought against him by Colquhoun, the latter having failed to prove it.

"The first of the raids referred to between the MacGregors and the Colquhouns took place on the 7. December 1602. at Glenfinlas a glen about two miles to the west of Rosdhu, and three to the north of Glenfruin, to which it runs parallel, namely in a north-westerly or a south-easterly direction.

"The raid was headed by Duncan Makewin Macgregour, tutour of Glenstray.¹ Accompanied with about eighty persons to quote from a contemporary Luss paper, by way of oppressions and reif, he came to the dwelling houses and steadings of many tenants, broke up their doors, and not only took their whole inside plenishing out of their houses, but also took and reft from them three hundred cows, one hundred horses and mares, four hundred sheep, and four hundred goats. Among the tenants despoiled were John Maccaslane of Caldenoth and John Leich of Cullichippen, besides various tenants in Edintagert, Glenmacairne, Auchintullich,

Finlas. Tomboy Midros &a. The houses plundered amounted to forty-five (another Luss paper states 'above fourscore').

"Another of the Luss papers entitled 'Memorandum for Duncan MacKinturnour, elder in Luss. records that in the month of Dec. 1602 years, at the herschip of Glenfinlas, two months before the day of Glenfruin, Duncan Mackewin Macgregor and his accomplices to the number of fourscore persons most cruelly reft, spoilzeit and away took from the said Duncane Mackinturnour, forth of his xxs land of Glenmakearne, twenty-five cows, and thirty sheep, the property of the said Duncan.

"Various lists of the names of the accomplices of the Macgregors are preserved among the Luss papers. These accomplices were chiefly persons of the name of MacGregor, under the Earl of Argyll and also under the Lairds of Tullibardin, Strowan Robertson, &a. The reseters of the plundered articles were chiefly about Lochgoylhead, Strachur, Ardkinlas, and Appin.

"At the fray of Glenfinlas, besides the depreddations committed two of the Colquhoun people were killed, one of them a household servant of the Laird of Colquhoun and the other a webster. Under the date of 12. Aug. 1603 Neill Macgregor was 'delated and accused of being airt and pairt of the slauchter of umqle Patrik Layng and of vmquile John Reid wobster, servandis to the Laird of Luss committit in Dec. last and also of stealing.'

"Alexander Colquhoun of Luss as we have already seen, before this raid complained to the Privy Council, against the Earl of Argyll, for not repressing the ClanGregor. Having then failed to obtain any redress from the Council, he was advised by some of his friends after the conflict at Glenfinlas, to appear before the King, who was at Stirling, to complain of the depreddations and cruel murders committed by the MacGregors, and to give the greater effect to his complaint, to take along with him a number of women carrying the bloody shirts of their murdered or wounded husbands and sons. The idea of this tragical demonstration was suggested to him by Semple of Fulwood and William Stewart, Captain of Dumbarton Castle, as we learn from the following letter, written to him by Thomas Fallisdail, burges of Dumbarton, only a few days after the conflict:—

"'Rycht honorable Sir, my dewtie with service remembrit, plas zour ma(stership) the Lard of Fullewod and the Capitane thinkis best zour ma : adres to zour self, wyth als mony bludie sarks, as ather ar deid, or hurt of zour men, togitter wyth als mony vemen, to present thame to his Maiestie in Stirling, and to zour ma : to be thair vpone Tysday nixt, for thair ar bayth to ryd thair vpone tysday, quha will assist zow at thair power. “ ‘ To the Rycht honorable Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, in haist, this vretting.’

“ Thus advised, Alexander Colquhoun of Luss went on the 21. of the same month, to the King, at Stirling, accompanied by a number of females, the relatives of the parties who had been killed or wounded at Glenfinlas, each carrying the bloody shirt of her killed or wounded relative, to implore his Majesty to avenge the wrongs done to them. The scene produced a strong sensation in the mind of the King, who was extremely susceptible to the impression of tragic spectacles. His sympathy was excited towards the sufferers; and his resentment was roused against the Macgregors, on whom he vowed to take vengeance. As the speediest means of redress, he granted a commission of lieutenancy to Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, investing him with power to repress crimes of the description from which he had suffered, and to apprehend the perpetrators.

“ This commission granted to their enemy, appears to have roused the lawless rage of the Macgregors, who rose in strong force to defy the Laird of Luss; and Glenfruin, with its disastrous and sanguinary defeat of the Colquhouns, and its ultimate terrible consequences to the victorious clan themselves was the result. Sir Robert Gordon, in his history of the Earls of Sutherland, mistakes the conflict of Glenfinlas¹ for the more serious one of Glenfruin which took place shortly after. . . . Sir Walter Scott founding on this (Gordon's) as his authority improves upon it by the addition of various circumstances which, however, are purely fictitious. ‘ The widows of the slain,’ says he, ‘ to the number of eleven score, in deep mourning, riding upon white palfreys, and each bearing her husband's bloody shirt on a spear, appeared at Stirling, in presence of a monarch peculiarly accessible to such sights of fear and sorrow, to demand vengeance for the death of their husbands, upon those by whom they had been made desolate.’ The bloody shirt scene was after the raid at Glenfinlas, and as only a few (two) were killed on that occasion, though a great number might be wounded, Sir Robert Gordon and after him Sir Walter Scott, exaggerates what actually took place. The scene was not repeated after the more sanguinary conflict at Glenfruin, though then it would have been a spectacle much more impressive from the far greater number who were killed and wounded.

“ It has been asserted by some writers that, in the beginning of the year 1603, the MacGregors and the Colquhouns made friendly propositions to hold a conference with the view of terminating their animosities, while at the same time each determined should the result of a meeting be unsuccessful, to have recourse to instant measures of hostility. Sir Robert Gordon . . . represents the matter more favourably for the Macgregors. (Here follows a short quotation from Sir Robert Gordon from the departure of Alexander Macgregor of Rannoch, the Laird of Luss perewing them at Glenfruin.) Sir Robert Gordon was contemporary, but he is here incorrect in various of his statements, as can be proved from authentic documents of the period. No evidence whatever exists of the conference referred to having been either held or intended. From the position of the two parties, it is hardly possible that any such conference could have been thought of, far less held. The Macgregors were more in the position of rebels, whilst Colquhoun was invested with a commission from the King to apprehend and punish them for their crimes. and the whole circumstances of the case, so far from affording any ground to believe that, at the close of the alleged conference, the Laird of Luss treacherously attacked the Macgregors, render it far more probable that he himself was entrapped by them while proceeding through the Glen in execution of his commission.¹

“That the Macgregors were, in the present instance, the aggressors is the conclusion, to which we are led from the statements made in the indictment of Allaster Macgregor, in which he was accused of having deliberately planned the destruction of the Colquhouns and their allies, the extirpation of their name, the plunder of their lands, and of having for the purpose of carrying out these plans, invaded Alexander Colquhoun’s lands with numerous armed men; all of which was proved against him by a jury of most respectable gentlemen.² Similar statements are contained in the indictments of others who were tried for the same crime, and in many acts and proclamations against the clan. If the correctness of the statement of the Government may be disputed, it is to be observed that its truthfulness is strongly confirmed by the declaration made by Allaster Macgregor before his execution.

“That some desperate attack upon the Colquhouns was at this time contemplated by the Macgregors appears to have been the feeling prevalent throughout the Lennox. The order issued by the town Council of Dumbarton, that the burghesses should be provided with armour, and be ready to present the same at the muster, plainly indicates the apprehensions entertained in that burgh, that danger was impending, and that it was necessary to be prepared for resisting some dreaded foe, who was doubtless the ClanGregor.

² The gentlemen of the jury were undoubtedly highly respectable, but not all of them impartial. A list of them will be found in chapter xxvi.

“1603. Jan. 8. It is ordained that all burgesses within the burgh be sufficientlie furnissit with armor, and that sik persones as the baillies and counsall think fitt sall be furnissit with hagbuttis, that they haif the samyn with the furnitair thaito, utheris quha sall be appointit, to haif jak, speir, and steilbonnat, that thay be furnissit with the samyn, and that the baillies and counsall on the xxi of this instant, mak ane cathelok of the saidis personis namis with thair armor, and thay be chargeit to haif the said armor redey, and to present thame with the samyn at muster and this to remaine in all tymes under the pane of ten pundis, the ane half to the baillie, the uthir to the use of the burgh. Item that ilk merchand or craftsman, keipand baith haif ane halbart within the samyn under the pane of five pundis. Item, that na burgess be maid heirefter without production of his armor at his creatioun, and that he sweir the samyn is his own.

“How well founded these apprehensions were was proved by the event. Allaster Macgregor of Glenstra, at the head of a large body of the ClanGregor, with the addition of a considerable number of confederates from the clans of Cameron and Anverich, armed with hagbuts, pistols, murrions, mailcoats, pow-aixes two-handed swords, bows, darlochs, and other weapons, advanced into the territory of Luss. At that time there was no turnpike on Lochlongside, the present Lochlong road having since been made, it is supposed by the Duke of Argyll, and therefore formerly called ‘The Duke’s road.’ There was however a tract or path of some kind along the side of Lochlong and this may have been the way by which the Macgregors came to Glenfruin. To repel the invader, the Laird of Luss hastily collected a considerable force of men, whom, under a royal commission, he had raised for the protection of the district, and for the punishment of the Macgregors.

“The parties encountered each other on the 7. of Feb. 1603. at Glenfruin, at a spot, according to tradition, situated upon the farm of Strone, or Auchengaich, near the sources of the Fruin. The name Glenfruin which means the ‘glen of sorrow’ well accords with the sanguinary scene which on this occasion it witnessed; but it did not from thence derive its name. In charters of the lands of Luss, of a date previous to the battle, mention is made of Frevne. It forms a verdant valley, of considerable length, some of it under cultivation with a deep loamy soil, nearly half a mile in breadth between hills barren of trees and shrubs, with the exception of here and there a thorn or mountain ash, but whose sides, especially to the north of the glen, are covered with beautiful green pasturage for sheep, instead of the brown heather of the olden times. The spot on which the bloody conflict took place is still pointed out by tradition, which preserves fresh the memory of what has rendered it so memorable, What the numbers were on each side has not been exactly ascertained. The Macgregors have been estimated by some at 300 foot ; by others at 400, and there can be no doubt that this clan could without difficulty, muster at least that number, when they had some great purpose to accomplish such as their taking vengeance on their enemy the Laird of Luss would doubtless be accounted. The forces of Colquhoun of Luss have been also variously estimated, some probably by exaggeration making them 300 horse and 500 foot. That he would succeed in raising in his own district including the town of Dumbarton, so large an army is extremely doubtful. The ground on which the conflict took place was very unfavourable, both for the horse and foot of the Colquhouns, especially the former. Surprise has been expressed that the Laird of Luss should have risked a conflict with the enemy in such a position, but having been entrapped¹ he was placed in circumstances which gave him no choice. The Macgregors assembled in Glenfruin in two divisions, one of them at the head of the glen, and the other in ambuscade near the farm of Strone, at a hollow or ravine called the Crate. The Colquhouns came into Glenfruin from the Luss side, through the Glen of Auchengaich, which is opposite Strone, probably by Glen Luss and Glen Mackurin. Alexander Colquhoun pushed on his forces, in order to get through the Glen before encountering the Macgregors ; but aware of his approach, Allaster Macgregor, the Captain of the Clan, also pushed forward one division of his forces, and entered at the head of the glen, in time to prevent his enemy from emerging from the upper end of the glen, whilst his brother, John Macgregor, with the division of his clan which lay in ambuscade by a detour, took the rear of the Colquhouns, which prevented their retreat down the glen without fighting their way through that section of the Macgregors who had got in their rear. The success of the stratagem by which the Colquhouns were thus placed between two fires seems to be the only way of accounting for the terrible slaughter of the Colquhouns and the much less loss of the Macgregors.

“ Allaster Macgregor, at the head of his division furiously charged the Laird of Luss and his men. For a time the Colquhouns bravely maintained the contest. An old weaver, resident in Strone, who took part with the Colquhouns is said to have been one of the best fighters on that day. He is said to have killed with his own hand a good many of the Macgregors which confutes the story that they suffered so little at Glenfruin that though many of them were wounded, not more than two of them, during the whole battle were killed, which of course was impossible in such a conflict. But in the unfavourable circumstances in which they had to fight, the Colquhouns soon became unable to maintain their ground, and falling into a moss at the farm of Auchengaich, they were thrown into disorder, and being now at the mercy of the Macgregors, who taking advantage of the confusion killed many of them, they made a hasty and disorderly retreat, which proved even more disastrous than the conflict; for they had to force their way through the men led by John Macgregor, whilst they were pursued behind by Allaster, who, reuniting the two divisions of his army continued the pursuit. But even in the flight there were instances of intrepidity on the part of the Colquhouns. One of them when pressed hard by some of the Macgregors as he fled from the scene of battle, on reaching the Coinach, a black, deep whirling pool or linn of the water of Finlas in Shantron Glen, with steep, almost perpendicular banks, on both sides, rising to a height of at least 120 feet above the pool at the bottom, where the rays of the sun never penetrate, and where the sky is scarcely ever visible overhead, by a desperate effort at once jumped the frightful chasm. None of the Macgregors ventured to follow him by making the perilous leap. The Colquhoun immediately turned round, drew an arrow from his quiver, and shot the nearest of his pursuers as he stood perplexed and baffled on the opposite brink, and then made his escape without further molestation. Whoever fell into the hands of the victors even defenceless women and children, were remorselessly put to death. The Chief of the Colquhouns was chased to the very door of the Castle of Rossdhu, whose loop-holed walls, six feet in thickness, afforded a secure refuge; and his horse, while leaping over a fall or gully not far from Rossdhu, was killed under him by a Macgregor. The ruins of the castle are still to be seen near the present more modern mansion. In the flight the Laird of Bucklyvie was killed by the Macgregors at the farm of Ballemenoch or Middle Kilbride, at the eastern entrance of Glenfruin; and the small rivulet, which is a tributary to the Fruin, is called Buchlyvie's Burn to this day, from the Laird's having been killed there."

We deem it unnecessary to quote any passages from Chalmers "Caledonia," because the same information is to be found elsewhere, and that author evinces throughout, what appears to be a personal spite against the Clan.

Chapter XXIV

Conflict of Glenfruin

THE world-wide celebrity of the writings of Sir Walter Scott, whose sympathetic mind caught the fire of Highland adventure and was able to reflect it back into the hearts of thousands who never saw the scenes, or knew the Highland people, has led to implicit belief in all that he has narrated, although it was his avowed purpose to mix romance with history, and the congenial materials which he wove into his brilliant pages were derived from various informants and mingled sources. Sir Walter's account of the Battle of Glenfruin as given in the introduction to "Rob Roy" must ever be interesting, and therefore it is here copied verbatim.

"Other occasions frequently occurred, in which the MacGregors testified contempt for the laws, from which they had often experienced severity, but never protection. Though they were gradually deprived of their possessions, and of all ordinary means of procuring subsistence, they could not nevertheless, be supposed likely to starve of famine while they had the means of taking from strangers what they considered as rightfully their own. Hence they became versed in predatory forays, and accustomed to bloodshed. Their passions were eager, and with a little management on the part of some of their most powerful neighbours, they could easily be hounded out, to use an expressive Scotch phrase, to commit violence, of which the wily instigators took the advantage, and left the ignorant MacGregors an undivided portion of blame and punishment. This policy of pushing on the fierce Clans of the Highlands and Borders to break the peace of the country, is accounted by the historian one of the most dangerous practices of his own period, in which the MacGregors were considered as ready agents.

"Notwithstanding these severe denunciations, which were acted upon in the same spirit in which they were conceived, some of the Clan still possessed property, and the Chief of the name in 1592, is designed Allaster MacGregor of Glenstrae. He is said to have been a brave and active man; but from the tenor of his confession at his death, appears to have been engaged in many and desperate feuds, one of which finally proved fatal to himself and many of his followers. This was the celebrated conflict at Glenfruin, near the south-western extremity of Loch Lomond, in the vicinity of which the MacGregors continued to exercise much authority by the 'coir a glaive,'¹ or right of the strongest, which we have already mentioned.

"There had been a long and bloody feud betwixt the MacGregors and the Laird of Luss, head of the family of Colquhoun, a powerful race on the lower part of Loch Lomond. The MacGregors' tradition affirms that the quarrel began on a very trifling subject. Two of the MacGregors being benighted, asked shelter in a house belonging to a dependant of the Colquhouns, and were refused. They then retreated to an outhouse, took a wedder from the fold, killed it and supped off the carcase, for which it is said they offered payment to the proprietor. The Laird of Luss seized on the offenders, and, by the summary process which feudal barons had then at their command, had them both condemned and executed.² The MacGregors verify this account of the feud by appealing to a proverb current amongst them, execrating the hour (Mult dhu an Carbail³ ghil) that 'the black wedder with the white tail' was ever lambed. To avenge this quarrel the Laird of MacGregor assembled his clan, to the number of three or four hundred men, and marched towards Luss from the banks of Loch Long, by a pass called Raid (Ruidh) na Gael or the Highlandman's pass.

"Sir Humphrey Colquhoun received early notice of this incursion, and collected a strong force, more than twice the number of that of the invaders. He had with him the gentlemen of the name of Buchanan, with the Grahams, and other gentry of the Lennox, and a party of the citizens of Dumbarton, under command of Tobias Smollett, a magistrate or bailie of that town and ancestor of the celebrated author.

"The parties met in the valley of Glenfruin, which signifies Glen of sorrow—a name that seemed to anticipate the event of the day, which, fatal to the conquered party, was at least equally so to the victors, the 'babe unborn' of the Clan Alpine having reason to repent it. The MacGregors somewhat discouraged by the sight of a force much superior to their own, were cheered on to the attack by a seer, or second-sighted person, who professed that he saw the shrouds of the dead wrapt around their principal opponents. The clan charged with great fury on the front of the enemy, while John MacGregor, with a strong party, made an unexpected attack on the flank. A great part of the Colquhoun's force consisted in cavalry, which could not act in the boggy ground. They were said to have disputed the field manfully, but were at length completely routed, and a merciless slaughter was exercised on the fugitives, of whom betwixt two and three hundred fell on the field and in the pursuit. If the MacGregors lost, as is averred, only two men slain in action, they had slight provocation for an indiscriminate massacre. It is said that their fury extended itself to a party of students for clerical orders, who had imprudently come to see the battle. Some doubt is thrown on this fact from the indictment against the chief of the Clan Gregor being silent on the subject, as is the historian Johnston, and a Professor Ross, who wrote an account of the battle twenty-nine years after it was fought. It is however constantly averred by the tradition of the country, and a stone where the deed was done is called 'Leck a Mhinisteir,' the Minister or clerk's flag stone. The MacGregors impute this cruel action to the ferocity of a single man of their tribe, renowned for size and strength, called Dugald, Ciar Mhor,¹ or the great mouse-coloured Man. He was MacGregor's foster brother, and the Chief committed the youths to his charge, with directions to keep them safely till the affray was over. Whether fearful of their escape or incensed by some sarcasms which they threw at his tribe, or whether out of mere thirst of blood, this savage, while the other MacGregors were engaged in pursuit, poniarded his helpless and defenceless prisoners. When the Chieftain, on his return demanded where the youths were, the Ciar Mhor drew out his bloody dirk, saying in Gaelic, 'Ask that, and God save me.' The latter words allude to the exclamation which his victims used when he was murdering them. It would seem therefore that this horrible part of the story is founded on fact, though the number of the youths so slain is probably exaggerated in Lowland accounts. The common people say that the blood of the Ciar Mhor's victims can never be washed off the stone. When MacGregor learnt their fate, he expressed the utmost horror at the deed, and upbraided his foster-brother with having done that which would occasion the destruction of him and his Clan. The homicide was the ancestor of Rob Roy,² and the tribe from which he was descended. He lies buried at the church of Fortingal, where his sepulchre, covered with a large stone, is still shown, and where his great strength and courage are the theme of many traditions.

² This tradition, given more fully in the previous chapter, page 281, appears extremely probable, in addition to the other circumstances as to Argyle (see page 321). There was no ancient feud with the Colquhouns, and even after the conflict, on the MacGregor side, there was no feeling of old grudge.

³ This word, meaning tail in Gaelic, should be "carbail," the first letter has evidently slipped into "c" through reprints.

"MacGregor's brother was one of the very few of the tribe who were slain. He was buried near the field of battle, and the place is marked by a rude stone called the Grey Stone of MacGregor.

"Sir Humphrey³ Colquhoun, well mounted, escaped for the time to the castle of Banochar, or Benechra. It proved no sure defence however, for he was shortly after murdered in a vault of the castle,—the family annals say by the MacGregors, though other accounts charge the deed upon the MacFarlanes.”

“Note by Sir Walter Scott.—The above is the account which I find in a manuscript history of the clan MacGregor, of which I was indulged with a perusal by Donald MacGregor, Esq.¹ late Major of the 33rd Regiment, where great pains have been taken to collect traditions and written documents concerning the family. But an ancient and constant tradition, preserved among the inhabitants of the country, and particularly those of the clan MacFarlane, relieves Dugald Ciar Mhor of the guilt of murdering the youths, and lays the blame on a certain Donald or Duncan Lean, who performed the act of cruelty, with the assistance of a gillie who attended him, named Charlioch or Charlie. They say that the homicides dared not again join their clan, but that they resided in a wild and solitary state as outlaws, in an unfrequented part of the MacFarlane’s territory. Here they lived for some time undisturbed, till they committed an act of brutal violence on two defenceless women, a mother and daughter of the MacFarlane clan. In revenge for this atrocity, the MacFarlanes hunted them down, and shot them. It is said that the younger ruffian, Charlioch, might have escaped, being remarkably swift of foot. But his crime became his punishment, for the female whom he had outraged had defended herself desperately, and had stabbed him with his own dirk on the thigh. He was lame from the wound, and the more easily overtaken and killed. I incline to think that this last is the true edition of the story, and that the guilt was transferred to Dougal Ciar Mhor as a man of higher name, or it is possible these subordinate persons had only executed his orders.”—Introduction to “Rob Roy,” 1829.

The preceding account of the Battle of Glenfruin by Sir Walter Scott falls into the error of dates to be found in the article on Colquhoun in Douglas’s “Baronage,”² which is understood to have been written by Crawford, the Peerage writer, and was apparently taken from a MS. History in the Colquhoun family. It has been shown from the “Chiefs of Colquhoun,” that while Sir Humphrey met his death in the Castle of Bannachra, by a raid of Macfarlanes only, so far as can be proved, in ¹ Who afterwards purchased Balnald in Strathardle; the MS. History perused by Sir Walter Scott, we are informed by Alex. MacGregor, Esq., Crosshill, Glasgow (grand-nephew of Major Donald), has been lost. It is supposed that the tradition as to the students may have been collected whilst Major Donald was quartered at Roseneath in 1824.

² In the article on MacGregor in Douglas’s “Baronage,” explanation is made that Humphrey, Laird of Luss, was not murdered after Glenfruin—Buchanan stating that he was “killed in Benechra Castle by the Macfarlanes, through influence of a certain nobleman whom Luss had disobliged.” See also chapter xx., pages 233-4.

1592, it was in the time of his brother and successor, Alexander, that the conflict of Glenfruin took place on the 7th Feb. 1603, and it also appears that the display of shirts to excite the King's indignation followed the smaller raid of Glenfinlas of the 7th Dec. 1603. The picturesque account of the procession of the widows, mention is only made of two men slain, is given by Sir Walter after the recital of the alleged affair of the murder of the students, with these few words preceding it:—

“This battle of Glenfruin, and the severity which the victors exercised in the pursuit, was reported to King James VI. in a manner most unfavourable to the ClanGregor, whose general character being that of lawless though brave men, could not much avail them in such a case. That James might fully understand the extent of the slaughter, the widows of the slain, &c.”¹

We have now to consider more particularly the accusation of the murder of the defenceless students. Sir Walter quotes an account from traditional sources, collected by the late Major Donald MacGregor of Balnald. Sir William Fraser repeats this, and adds a few particulars:—

“On the memorable day of the conflict of Glenfruin, according to the tradition of the country, a number of youths who, from mere curiosity had come from the Grammar School of Dumbarton to witness the battle that was expected to take place, were massacred in cold blood by one of the Clan Macgregor. The boys came along the ridge of the high hills on the south side of the Fruin called the Highland road; and they were shut up for safety in a hut or barn, to the west of the battle on Greenfield Moor, under the charge of a Highlander, who, on seeing the MacGregors successful, stabbed them with his dirk one by one as they came out of this place of shelter. The site of the barn is still pointed out at a spot called Lach na faul, or Lagnagaul, ‘hollow of the Lowlander.’ It is worthy of notice that this atrocious massacre forms no part of the charges in the indictment of any of the MacGregors who were tried before the High Court of Justiciary on account of the raid of Glenfruin, or ‘The field and murder of Lennox,’ as that conflict is sometimes called. But some colour of truth seems to be given to the tradition by an act of Privy Council 5. Jan. 1609. in which Allan Oig M^cIntnach,² in Glencoe, is accused of having, while with the ClanGregor in Glenfruin, ‘with his awne hand murdered without pity the number of fourtie poor persons who were naked and without armour.’

“Sir William also quotes in a footnote ‘The barn of Blairvadden in the dukedom of Lennox was burnt by the Macgregors in Feb. 1603 as appears from the records of the Privy Seal 28 July 1612. and 21 Dec. 1613.’ In the Records there is no allusion to any persons having been killed or even injured on that occasion. Sir William adds the following remark ‘Nor do the MacGregors deny that the story is founded on fact; but they affirm that the Clan as a body execrated the crime, and they impute it to the ferocity of one of their tribe, Dugald Ciar mhor, & a. & a.’”

The original Dougal Ciar died many years before the date of Glenfruin, though one of his descendants at that time bore the name of Dougal, with the patronymic belonging to his house, Dougal M^cCoulcheir, but there is no evidence against him. We cannot assent to the statement that MacGregors do not deny the story. On the contrary, it may be confidently asserted that there is no proof, or even probability, that any MacGregor was concerned in the deed. Turning to the “Baronage” under the article of MacGregor we may see what Sir John MacGregor Murray’s views were on the subject;—

“It has been industriously reported, that one Cameron, a servant of MacGregor’s had murdered a number of boys the sons of gentlemen of distinction, who were on their way to the school of Dumbarton, or had come to see the fight; the following reasons may be sufficient to discredit these reports:—

“1. That we had few or no very young scholars in these days, they were generally young men from 15 to 25. and of course capable of bearing arms.

“2. Glenfruin, about six miles in length lies beyond large mountains, at a distance of several miles from, and far off any road leading to Dumbarton; and as the fight was at the farthest end of the Glen, which was then entirely wild and uninhabited so it is totally incredible that the scholars should have been there accidentally or that any boys, much less the sons of gentlemen of distinction, should walk so many miles to school, across such hills.

“3. Professor Ross, who wrote an accurate account of the battle in the course of the history of another family, about 29 years after it was fought, when the truth or falsity of the report must have been well known, does not mention such; nor does Mr Johnston, who about 20 years after Mr Ross, wrote a detail of the battle, and who as he was employed to traduce the MacGregors, Macdonalds, and Macleans, and write the eulogiums of their enemies, would not have omitted a circumstance which if true would have afforded him such a field of declamation against this Clan; nor is there any such cruelty even hinted at in the preamble or any other part of the Act of Parliament afterwards made against them.

"4. Since neither Mr Ross nor Mr Johnstone mention it, it is clear no such report prevailed in those days and therefore it was trumped up of a later date to serve certain purposes of the enemies of the MacGregors, or if there were any scholars they must have been such as had followed their friends as volunteers to the battle and shared the fate of the day."

It may be readily granted that local traditions have usually some grains of truth, although names of personages are apt to get mixed up with personal prejudices in their transmission from past generations. It seems probable that a calamity happened to some unarmed persons after the fight, whether by the hand of a M^cLean, a Cameron, a M^cIntuagh, or a MacGregor remains undecided, but the latter, for reasons already stated as to the readiness with which guilt would have been attached to one of the Clan on their trial, is most improbable. Whoever may have been the criminal (if such there were) the act was that of a single individual apart from any clan.¹

Whilst regretting such carnage, as there may have been in the eagerness of pursuit, in days when quarter was seldom asked or given and the victors were of an excitable race, peculiarly liable to the "madness of battle" (as it was called), yet MacGregors cannot read of the conflict without just pride in the admirable generalship of the two Glenstray brothers, and in the valour of the Clan which carried the day against such great odds.

Allaster MacGregor of Glenstray had a holding in Rannoch, and it was from thence that he started for the Colquhoun country. Dwelling on the Sliosmin side of Loch Rannoch (i.e., the north side under Menzies of Menzies, the Laird of Weem), he probably first crossed the Gaur Water by the Ferry called Tighnalinne, a little above the head of the Loch, thence across the hill by Lairig Mheachdainn (an old Gaelic word for twigs or branches) to near Pubil, towards the head of Glenlyon, thence by a pass called Lairig nan Lunn² to Glenlochay, striking that glen about eight miles above Killin, thence up that glen to near its head and across the ridge to Strathfillan at Crianlarich, down Glenfalloch to the head of Loch Lomond, and from Tarbet on Loch Lomond through the Pass of Arrochar to Loch Long.¹ Glenstray had allies in the M^cFarlanes of Arroquhar, and we know from the indictment against his own clansmen, the tribe of Dougal Ciar, that they (whose dwelling was in Balquhidder) convoyed him to "the syd of Lochloun," from whence by Gairlochhead he would strike off Strone in Glenfruin. The march must have occupied several of the cold, misty days of February. The wives and bairns doubtless watched these "pretty men" all starting in their warlike array, and many an anxious heart must have been left amongst their womenkind, although trained to courage and endurance. Happily, however, they could not foresee the calamities which victory was to bring upon them. In whatever light the case may appear in these days when the power and justice of law are established, and when all things work comfortably for the nation at large, yet when the ClanGregor sallied forth in strength that wintry morning, whether for an intended conference or for mortal combat, it was under a deep sense of wrong done to them and of bitter persecution. Few, if any, of these warriors returned, and worse times than any yet experienced in their struggling existence, were to follow the ill-starred success of their arms.

² "Lunn" means the poles or staves on which a coffin is borne.

¹ Assistance in tracing the probable route has been kindly given by Mr John Robertson, Old Blair, Blair Atholl, himself a Rannoch man.

The volumes of the Register of the Privy Council belonging to this period have unfortunately been lost for many years, but the following entry from the published edition of the Register explains best all that is known about an Act against the ClanGregor which was now formulated.

"1603. April 3. To Sunday has been ascribed, the famous Act of Council proscribing the Clan Macgregor and abolishing their very name, Though from the loss of the volumes of the Register of Council carrying affairs from Feb. 1603 to August 1606, the official copy of this famous Act has not been preserved, there can be no doubt as to its date, inasmuch as it is cited thus in the preamble to a subsequent Act of Parliament relating to the MacGregors in 1617:—'Oure Sovereane Lord and Esttattis of this present parliament remembering how that his sacred Majestye being verie justlie moved with a haterent and detestatioun of the barbarous murtheris and insolencies committit be ther Clangregoure upoun his Majestiyes peciabile and goode subjectis of the Lennox at Glenfrone in the moneth of Feb. 1603. and how that the bair and simple name of MacGregour maid that haill Clane to presume of their power, force, and strengthe, and did encourage thame, without reverence of the law or fear of punischement, to go forward in their iniquities: Upoune the consideratioun quhairof his Majestie with advyse of the Lordis of his Secreit Counsall, maid dyvers actis and ordinances aganis thame speciallie one Act upoun the 3. day of Aprill 1603, whereby it wes ordaint that the name of M^cGregoure sulde be altogidder abolisched, and that the haill persounes of that Clan suld renounce thair name and tak thame sum uther name, and that they nor nane of thair posteritie suld call thame selffis Gregour or M^cGregoure thair efter, under the payne of deade' &c.—Acts of Parl. of Scot. iv. 550.) It is clear, therefore, that on that same Sunday on which King James took his farewell, of the Edinburgh people, in the Church of St. Giles, there must have been a Council meeting at which he left this parting thunderbolt, against the unfortunate MacGregors."

The above shows that the King was not so incensed against the Clan and the Chief as to be unwilling to consent to their banishment from the realm instead of their death, and to this alternative Glenstray alludes in his last declaration. Those whose signatures appear were apparently not enemical to the Clan, but other counsels must have prevailed later with the King.

“June. of all his bypast crimes and 500 merks which was granted to him by act of Council."

It is difficult to decide which act was the most criminal—the purchase of life and liberty at the cost of blood or the offer dangled out as a bait by the Government.

"July. Item paid by special command and ordinance of the Secret Council to Archibald Cunninghame, Mr Porter of the Castle of Edinburgh for the entertainment of certain pledges of the Clangregor. Petition granted. Original in General Register House."

Thus, by the base but ingenious device of the Executive, every man who was himself a felon, had the strongest inducement to serve the Government as executioner of the MacGregors, whose faults, whatever they might be, had now incurred the penalty of every man's hand being stirred up against them. And yet, seeing the numerous instances of ressett and kindness nobly shewn to them in spite of the imminent risk of so doing; it is evident that they must have had qualities which secured the strong attachment of their friends.

“Letters also to charge Archibald Earl of Argyle, Hary Stewart commendator of St Colme, — Campbell of Lundy, Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, Aulay M^cAulay of Ardincabill and Robert Galbraith of Kilchreuch to compeir before the Council the 20. day of this instant to the effect and for the cause above specified.

“October. Letters to be proclaimed at the market crosses of Stirling and Dumbarton charging all his Highness's lieges dwelling nearest (ewest) and subject to the incursions of the Clangregor that they live on their own guard, keep watch and be ready at all occasions to defend themselves from their pursuit.

“Letters also to charge the Lairds of Tullibardin, Grant, and Strowane to exhibite and produce before the council the 25. of this instant each of them that . . . son of umqle John Dow M^cGregor, which they have in keeping, respectively, to be taken order with as shall seem most expedient to the Council under the pain of rebellion.—Treasurer’s Books.”

The following is from the “Annals” written by Sir James Balfour, Lyon King of Arms, who lived in this reign, and died in 1657 :—

“The 2. of October this zeire the notorious thief and rebell Allaster M^cGregor Laird of Glenstrae quho had escaped the Laird of Arkinlesse handes was taken by Archibald Earle of Argyle, quho (befor he would zeild) had promised to him to conevoiy him saue out of Scotts ground ; to performe which promise, he caused some servants conwey him to Berwicke, and besouthe it some myelles, and bring him back againe to Edinburgh quher he was hangit with maney of his kinred the 20 day of January in the following zeire, 1604.”

In a Diary written by Robert Birrel, quoted with Pitcairne’s observations in next chapter, the 2nd Oct. was the day of the capture by Ardkinlas ; and the 4th Jan., the following year, the date of the recapture, &a, it seems probable, from the minuteness of Birrel’s Diary, that the dates he gives may be the most correct.

Returning to the “Chiefs of Colquhoun,”¹ we find much useful information and instructive commentary :—

“The melancholy fate of the Colquhouns excited very general commiseration. But the results were more disastrous to the victors than to the vanquished. The resentment of the Government was intensely inflamed against the Clan Gregor, whose lawless deeds, ruthless as they may have been before, had culminated in the terrific scenes enacted at Glenfruin. The measures of the Government against them were very severe, contemplating nothing less than the extermination of the clan.

“To the Earl of Argyle, who was the King’s Lieutenant in the part of the country inhabited by the Macgregors, chiefly was committed the task of executing the severe enactments made against them. Indignant complaints were made against Aulay Macaulay of Ardincaple, who though he had formally joined with the Laird of Luss against Galbraith of Culcreugh, was charged with having reset and intercommuned with the MacGregors at Glenfruin, which would certainly have been only to act in conformity with the bond of clanship, into which he had

“On 17. March 1603.² John Stewart of Ardmolice, Sheriff of Bute, became surety for Aulay Macaulay of Ardincaple, that he would compear before his Majesty's justice, or his deputies, in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, on the 17 day of May following, to underlie the law for reset and intercommuning with Ewin Macgregour, (Allaster) Macgregour of Glenstra, the deceased John Dow Macgregour his brother, and others of the Macgregours, and for ‘not rying the fray and following the thre saidis Macgregours commoun thevis and soirnaris, in thair incumming in the cuntrey of the Lennox, and steilling of leill menis guidis, and for inbringing of the saidis thevis and rebels, and also for airt and pairt with them in the incumming vpoune the Laird of Lussis lands, and for airt and part with the saidis Macgregouris in steilling fra the Laird of Luss, and his kyn and friendis and tennentis, of certane nolt, scheip,’ etc.

“But M^{ca}ulay escaped by a summary suppression of all investigation. Shielded by the Duke of Lennox, and being in the Duke's train, which was to accompany King James VI. on his way to England, to take possession of the English Throne vacant by the death of Queen Elizabeth, his Majesty issued a warrant at Berwick, 7. April 1603. to the Justice General and his deputies, commanding them to desert the dyet ‘against Macaulay, as he was altogether frie and innocent of the allegit crymes laid to his charge.’ The Justice, accordingly, on the 17. of May 1603, when this warrant was presented in the Justiciary Court by a servant of the Duke of Lennox, deserted the diet. Many others were less mercifully dealt with.”

“Before any judicial inquiry had been made on the 3. of April 1603, only two days before King James VI. left Scotland for England an Act of Privy Council was passed by which the name of Gregor or MacGregor was for ever abolished. All of this surname were commanded under the penalty of death to change it for another, and the same penalty was denounced against those who should give food or shelter to any of the clan. All who had been at the conflict of Glenfruin, and at the spoliation and burning of the Lands of the Laird of Luss and other lands, were also prohibited under the penalty of death from carrying any weapon except a pointless knife to eat their meat. Such a commencement did not augur well for the impartial administration of Justice, much less for the exercise of clemency to this clan. This was followed by the execution of many of those who had taken part in the sanguinary conflict of Glenfruin, some at the Burrowmure of Edinburgh, others at the castle Hill, and others at the public Cross ; and by other measures which bore the impress rather of vengeance than of calm judicial procedure. Thus cast beyond the pale of the Royal mercy, except on the most dishonourable conditions, the clan were driven to desperation, and thinking only of retaliation, broke forth into new outrages. After the conflict at Glenfruin, the MacGregors lost no time in selling and distributing the plunder which they had carried off, and this they did chiefly in Argyllshire. Some facts in reference to this subject we learn from the depositions made 20 July before Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, in the presence of a notary, by Donald Makglaschane in Baichybaine, officer, tenant, and servant to Sir John Campbell of Ardkinglas. He confessed that he himself had bought three cows, at the head of Lochfyne, from two of the most noted actors in these deeds of spoliation, and slaughter, three or four days, after they were perpetrated. He also confessed that he knew many of the tenants of the Laird of Ardkinglas, for whom that laird was responsible, who had bought from other of Allaster Macgregor's men, cows, horses, and other spoil. and who had entertained some of the same party.

"Some of the Campbells who were said to have been the secret allies of the Macgregors, having reset them after the battle of Glenfruin, and having been receivers of their stolen property, the Government now resolved to proceed against them. 'Commissions had been given by the Government to the gentlemen of the Lennox empowering them to seize the property as well as to pursue the persons of the ClanGregor. But this clan as 'the gentlemen of Lennox' describe them being 'in all their wicked actiones maist subtil and craftie' with the view of defeating the object of these commissions distributed their goods among some of their friends, and moved them to take action before the Lords of secret Council against those invested with such commissions for their wrongous intromissions with the said goods,"

This was the object of the "supercedere" granted to the petitioners as mentioned at page 306.

"Towards the end of 1603, Alexander Colquhoun and his men apprehended three of the ClanGregour,—Gregor Cruiginche Macgregor, John dow Macrob Macgregour, and Allaster Macewne Macgregor. On 24. Nov. he compeared before the Lords of the Secret Council at Stirling, presented these prisoners before them, and craved that he might be exonered and relieved of them. Their Lordships granted the prayer of his petition and having taken them of his hands, delivered them to the magistrates of the Burgh of Stirling.

"In the trials which took place from the 20. May 1603. to 2. March 1604. thirty-five of the Macgregors were convicted, and only one acquitted. In most or all of these instances the sentence of death, as we learn from Birrel's Diary, was carried into effect.

"Allaster MacGregor, the Chief of the Clan, did not fall into the hands of the Government till nearly a year after the battle of Glenfruin. He had been almost entrapped by Campbell of Arkinglas, Sheriff of Argyllshire, who, with the intention of arresting him, and sending him to the Earl of Argyll, had invited him to a friendly banquet in his house, which was situated on a small island in a loch, and who there made him a prisoner, and put him in a boat, guarded by five men; but Macgregor seeing that he was betrayed, made his escape by a deed of romantic daring, having leapt out of the boat into the water, and swam to the shore in safety. He was less successful in eluding Archibald Earl of Argyll."

After relating the circumstances regarding Argyll's treatment of Glenstray as given from several authorities in Pitcairne's "Criminal Trials," Sir William Fraser continues:—

"He arrived in Edinburgh on the evening of the 18. Jan. 1604. Only two days after his trial, and that of four of his clan, Patrik Aldoche Macgregour, William Macneill his servant, Duncan Pudrache Macgregour, and Allaster Macgregour Macean, took place before the High Court of Justiciary for the crime of treason, in their having attacked the Laird of Luss whilst armed with a royal commission to resist the 'cruel enterprises' of the ClanGregor.' 'Having been found guilty Allaster MacGregor and his four accomplices were sentenced to be hanged at the Cross of Edinburgh, on the same day. ' Effect was also given to the forfeiture of their lands, heritages &c.

"The heads of Allaster and of his associate, Patrick Aldoche Macgregor, were by order of the Government, sent to Dumbarton to be placed on the tolbooth of that burgh, the chief town of the district where the crimes for which they were executed had been committed. On 13. Feb. 1604. the Town Council of Dumbarton concludit and ordainit that the Laird of Macgregor's heid, with Patrik Auldochy his heid, be put up on the Tolbuith, on the maist convenient place the Baillies and Counsall thinkis guid.—Dumbarton Town Council Records.

"On the 19. of Jan. the day before his execution, Allaster Macgregor made a declaration or confession, which if entitled to credit, would throw light on the causes which led to the conflict of Glenfruin, as well as explain other matters connected with the family feuds of that period. In this confession he distinctly throws the whole blame of the outrages committed by the Macgregors against the Colquhouns upon the Earll of Argyll, and accuses that Earll of having instigated him to commit other slaughters and depredations. But as observed before, declarations which so seriously criminated the Earll of Argyll are not entitled, in the circumstances, to implicit credit for Allaster was doubtless much exasperated against the Earl, by whom he had been captured and delivered as a prisoner to the Government."

Reverting to an earlier page of "The Chiefs of Colquhoun," the following passage relates to the same subject.

“If the declaration or confession made by Allaster MacGregor before his execution is true, Argyll, instead of repressing the ClanGregor, made use of the power which, as the King’s Lieutenant, he had acquired over them to stimulate them to various acts of aggression against Colquhoun of Luss and others, who were his personal enemies. Founding mainly on the dying declaration of the Laird of Macgregor, Pitcairn, in his ‘Criminal Trials,’ says, ‘It is to this crafty and perfidious system of the Earl therefore, that we must solely trace the feud between the Colquhouns and the Macgregors, which proved in the end so hurtful to both, a result no doubt all along contemplated by this powerful nobleman.’

“We do not however agree with Pitcairn in founding so much on Macgregor’s dying declaration. The feeling of Macgregor against Argyll must in the circumstances have been intensely strong, as his words plainly indicate, and though in the presence of death, the motive to speak only the truth was powerful, yet our knowledge of human nature suggests caution in giving implicit credit even to his dying declaration; and its main features are certainly not confirmed, as Pitcairn asserts, by the Records of the Privy Council. The Laird of Macgregor’s testimony, therefore, in the circumstances, unsupported by that of other credible witnesses, is not a sufficient ground on which to impeach Argyll.”

Another passage has also to be here quoted.

“The statement made by Mr Pitcairn in his ‘Criminal Trials,’ that the Macgregors and the Colquhouns at Glenfruin ‘were in a manner equally armed with the royal authority’ is quite unfounded. The Laird of Luss was indeed then acting under a commission from the King to apprehend the ClanGregor, but to speak of the ‘Laird of Macgregor as marching to invade the Lennox under the paramount authority of the King’s Lieutenant,’ Argyll, is a gratuitous assertion. Whatever the friends of the Macgregors may say as to Argyll’s secretly encouraging the Macgregors to attack the Colquhouns, it is certain that he had no power to arm them with authority for that purpose, and there is no evidence that he formally did so. To place the two parties nearly on a footing of equality as to the right of meeting in hostile array for trial of strength, is a view entirely erroneous. The Macgregors were rebels, and the Colquhouns were armed with royal authority to suppress their outrages.”

A few remarks on the preceding observations must here be made. In the next chapter, Pitcairn’s article on the trial of Allaster MacGregor of Glenstray and of the conflict of Glenfruin are given in full, where the points to which Sir William Fraser raises objections can be studied carefully.

The opinion that the Colquhouns had the Royal sanction for taking up arms, and that their adversaries had not this authority, may be willingly conceded. In fairness to the Colquhouns, it may be noticed that there is no evidence that they purchased letters of fire and sword against their foes, as was so often the case, legalising violence and bloodshed by money. Their claim was, therefore, all the stronger, and consisted of two grants of authority: the first a Royal letter, sanctioning their opposing the MacGregors "without any crime," date Sep. 1602; the other a formal Commission of Lieutenantcy, given to Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, in Dec. 1602. We may consider that this Commission was obtained by an artifice in regard to the parade of shirts, but this does not affect the fact of the Royal authority, on which much stress is laid in the subsequent trials. The view taken by Mr Pitcairne, however, can be understood if its grounds are analysed.

The Commission given by the King to the Earl of Argyle against the ClanGregor, March 3, 1601, expressly annulled the Sovereign's own power to forgive any MacGregor, or to make terms with one of the name. This Commission was thus such a complete and absolute delegation of the Royal authority that if Argyle, as the King's Lieutenant in special charge of the MacGregors, had openly convened them to invade the Colquhouns, the curious anomaly of both opponents being armed with the Royal authority, as Mr Pitcairne conceived, might have actually occurred. But such overt acts were no part of Argyle's policy.

With regard to the last Declaration of Glenstray, it is impossible for one of the ClanGregor to feel strictly impartial. To us it is a legacy, the truth of which is a matter of painfully deep, and we may believe inherited, conviction. However presumptuous it may be to attempt to break a lance with the learned and courteous knight who has adopted the side of the Chiefs of Colquhoun, but who has evinced much delicacy and forbearance in treating of our combats with them, loyal duty to our heroic Chief must disregard any "skaith" risked in his defence.

Endeavouring to unravel the arguments advanced in the attempt to vindicate Archibald, second Earl of Argyle, by discrediting Glenstray's testimony, it must be remarked that Pitcairne, who had made criminal trials his special study and is recognised as a most competent authority on the subject, has collected excellent illustrations from nearly contemporary histories which relate the manner in which Glenstray was conveyed across the Border and brought back again.¹ This act of treachery is in conformity with the dying Chief's accusations against Argyle. Glenstray was no ordinary culprit, whose word was known to be unreliable; he had been befriended by the Laird of Tullibardine and the Commendator of Inchaffray, two landlords who appear to have borne a high character—there is no special bitterness in the Chief's last Declaration; it reads sad, sober, and earnest. But in so hurried a trial, with several of the jury personally incensed against Glenstray, and warned beforehand to bring in a true bill, his Declaration apparently received no attention. It is highly improbable that he could have been acquitted after the events of Glenfruin, especially as the fact of Luss having had a Royal Commission was fully recognised as adding to the offence, but the circumstances of the Declaration having been disregarded and hushed up by his adversaries is no argument against its truth. Nor was any contemporary refutation made, so far as is known.

Against Argyle there are certain suspicious probabilities. It is true that, whilst suffering from the ill-will and greed of their Glenurchay neighbour, the MacGregors had received some protection from the Earls of Argyle, but the enormous power with which this very young man was invested enabled him most easily to force those dependent on him, to carry out his behests whatever they might be, and Argyle had enemies who it was to his interest either to put out of the way or reduce to submission. The same complaint of double-dealing and of stirring up the Clans against each other was repeated a few years later, in the case of the MacDonalds and others.² We cannot hold Argyle guiltless of the charges brought against him by Glenstray.

¹ J. Hill Burton, in his "Narratives from Criminal Trials in Scotland," referring to Glenstray's trial, simply states that he does not believe the narrative of Glenstray having been taken across the Border, &c. His disbelief in the last Declaration naturally corresponds with this summary judgment.

Chapter XXVI

Conflict of Glenfruin, 1603

THE following excerpts are from the collection of "Celebrated Trials in Scotland," with critical and historical remarks by Hugo Arnot, Esq., Advocate, 1812 :—

"Alister Macgregor of Glenstra, Laird of Macgregor, for slaughtering the Laird of Luss's friends and plundering his lands.

"1604. This trial, and the subsequent proceedings relating to the Clan Gregor, afford the most characteristic evidence of the barbarous state of the Highlands in those times, of the lawless manners of the people, and despicable imbecility of the executive arm. The crimes with which the prisoner was charged resemble more the outrage and desolation of war than the guilt of a felon. He was accused of having conspired the destruction of the name of Colquhoun, its friends and allies, and the plunder of the lands of Luss; of having, on the 7. of Feb. preceding, invaded the lands of Sir Alexander Colquhoun of Luss with a body of 400 men, composed partly of his own Clan and of the Clan Cameron, and of lawless thieves and robbers, equipped in arms, and drawn up on the field of Lennox in battle array; of having fought with Sir Alexander, who, being authorised by a warrant from the Privy Council, had convocated his friends to resist this lawless host; of having killed about 140 of Sir Alexander's men, most of them in cold blood, after they were made prisoners; of having carried off 80 horses, 600 cows, and 800 sheep; and of burning houses, cornyards, &c.

"A jury of landed gentlemen of most respectable family sat upon the prisoner. . . . One of these persons indeed, Thomas Fallasdaill,¹ burgess of Dumbarton, ought to have been kept far aloof from this jury. He was the special confidant and adviser of the Laird of Luss; and it was in consequence of his suggestion that the Laird made the parade before his Majesty at Stirling, with the bloody shirts, stained with the gore of his followers. The jury unanimously convicted the prisoner, who, in consequence of the verdict, was condemned to be hanged and quartered at the Cross of Edinburgh, his limbs to be stuck up in the chief towns, and his whole estate, heritable and moveable, to be forfeited. Four of the Laird of MacGregor's followers, who stood trial along with him, were convicted and condemned to the same punishment, eleven on the 17. Feb. and six on the 1. March, and many pages of the criminal record are engrossed with the trials of the MacGregors. It became the object of national attention to break this lawless confederacy, of which the object was pointed revenge and indiscriminate plunder, supported by uniform contempt of the laws and resistance to the magistrates."

The whole subject of the Conflict of Glenfruin has such deep interest for everyone of the ClanGregor that it is desirable to give here in full the article upon it in the records of Criminal Trials by Robert Pitcairne.

(“ Mr Williame Hairt, Justice-Depute.)

“ ‘ Field of the Lennox, or Conflict of Glenfruite—Slaughter of the Colquhouns—Stoutreif—Treason—Fire-Raising, &a.’

“ The proscription and the cruel and systematic persecution of the ClanGregor, for a long series of years, although, in the abstract, a subject familiar to every reader of Scottish History, has hitherto been very imperfectly explained. The Criminal Records, and the Acts of the Privy Council, throw much light on all the branches of this extraordinary event. To save the necessity of future repetition, it appears to the Editor to be necessary, at the outset of these proceedings, to give a very brief sketch of the circumstances which led to the Field of the Lennox—or ‘ the Raid’ or ‘ Conflict of Glenfruin’; and of those events which ultimately terminated in the Execution of the Laird of Macgregor, and of many others of his name. All the future oppression and persecution of the race of the Macgregors ostensibly take their rise from this conflict.

“ The ClanGregor which, from whatever causes, had been for some time looked upon as an unruly tribe, was, for some years previous to 1603, placed under the control of Archibald (seventh) Earl of Argyle, who, as King's Lieutenant in the ‘ Bounds of the ClanGregor,’ was invested with very extensive powers, and who, by his acceptance of the office, was made answerable for all excesses committed by this Clan. In these circumstances, it might be supposed that it was Argyle's interest, as it certainly was his duty, to have done all in his power to retain the ClanGregor in obedience to the laws; but, on the contrary, it appears that from the time he first, as King's Lieutenant, acquired the complete control of the MacGregors, the principal use he made of his power, was artfully to stir up the Clan to various acts of aggression and hostility against his own personal enemies, of whom it is known Colquhoun of Luss was one. It is to this crafty and perfidious system of the Earl, therefore, that we must solely trace the feud between the Colquhouns and Macgregors, which proved, in the end, so hurtful to both; a result, no doubt, all along contemplated by this powerful but treacherous Nobleman. But it is unnecessary to enlarge on this point, as the Dying Declaration of the Laird of Macgregor places in a very clear light the cruel and deceitful policy pursued by Argyle, and which was too frequently resorted to by others, in those days, for quieting the Highlands. It may be remarked, that this interesting document, besides undoubtedly bearing internal evidence of truth, is corroborated, in almost every detail of it, by the Public Records.

“It is also to be remarked, as particularly worthy of notice, that at the period of this fatal conflict, both of the contending parties were, in a manner, equally armed with the Royal authority; the Laird of Luss having raised his forces under a commission, emanating from the King himself; while the Laird of MacGregor marched to invade the Lennox, under the paramount authority of the King's Lieutenant.”¹

It is unnecessary to quote the repetition of refutation of the alleged murder of Sir Humphrey, which error has been sufficiently cleared up already.

“The popular accounts of this transaction charge the MacGregors with two atrocities committed after the battle, and the Slaughter of a number of defenceless boys from the Grammar School or College of Dumbarton, who, from curiosity, came to see the fight, and had by Colquhoun's orders, been put into a barn for safety; where, on the success of the Highlanders, they were said to have been murdered. It is enough to state that this circumstance forms no point of any of the Dittays against those of the MacGregors who were tried for their share of the battle, although every criminal act which could be possibly adduced against each of them is carefully inserted in their Indictments. Such an atrocious fact could not have escaped the notice of all his Majesty's Advocates, for such a length of time—and there was no lack of informers. It is thought that this massacre is alluded to in the Records of the Privy Council, Jan. 5. 1609, where it is stated that ‘Allan Oig M^cIntach, in Glenco,’ when aiding the ClanGregor at Glenfruin, ‘with his awne hand, murdered without pity, the number of forty poor persons, who were naked and without armour.’”

According to Pitcairne's usual plan, some passages from contemporary MSS. are appended in illustration of the facts.

"III. Extract from Robert Birrel's Diary, MS. Advocates' Library (p. 138)—

"The 2 of Oct. (1603.) Allester M^cGregour of Glainstre tane be the Laird of Arkinles, bot scapit agine; bot efter, taken be the Earle of Argyll the 4 of Jan. and brocht to Edinburche the 9. of Jan. 1604. with 18 mae of his freindis, M^cGregouris. He wes conwoyit to Berwick be the Gaird conforme to the Earlis promese for he promesit to put him out of Scottis grund. Swa he keipit ane Hieland-manis promes; in respect he sent the Gaird to convoy him out of Scottis grund: Bot thair wer not directit to pairt with him, bot to fetche him bak agane. The 18 of Januar, at evine, he come agane to Edinburghe; and vpone the 20 day, he wes hangit at the Croce, and ij (eleven) of his freindis and name upone the gallous; Himself, being chieff, he wes hangit his awin nicht abone the rest of hes freindis.'

"IV. Extract from Calderwood's MS. Church History—

"Upon the 18 of Januar, Mackgregore was conveyed be the guard who attended upon the Counsell to Berwick, because Argyle promised to him, when he rendered himself, that he should be carried to England: But post was appointed to meet him to cause bring them back againe which was done. Immediately, upon the 20 of Januar, he, and sundrie of his Clane were hanged in Edinburgh. Sevine of thair number came in, long before, as pledges for performance of certaine conditions, which were to be filled by their Chief; but they were hanged with the rest, without the knowledge of ane Assyse. They were young men, and reputed honest for their own parts. The Laird of Makgrigore was hanged a pinne above the rest. A young man called James Hope, beholding the execution, fell down, and power was taken from half of his body. When he was carried to ane house, he cried, that "one of the Highland men had shott him with ane arrow." "He died upon the sabbath day after."

"Footnote. Fleming in his Chronicle (MS. Advocates' Library) thus records the event. The Laird of M^cGregour hangit at Edinburgh and xj of his unhappie kin. They hang all nicht on the gallous. This almost unexampled act of perfidy, on the part of Argyle the King's Lieutenant, and the Justice General of Scotland, gives a lamentable picture of those unhappy times; and it would appear that the government seemed to think it no discredit to take advantage of such an infamous breach of trust.

"V. The Laird of M^cGregours Declaratioun, produceit the tyme of conviction.

"I, Allester Magrigour of Glenstra, Confesse heir before God, that I have bein persuadit, movit and intysit, as I am presentlie accusit and trublit for; also gif I had usit counsall or command of the man that hes Intysit me, I wald have done and committit sindrie heich Murthouris mair; ffor trewlie, sen I was first his Majesteis man, I culd never be at ane eise, by my Lord of Argylls falshete and inventiones; for he causit M^cClaine and Glenchamrowne committ herschip and slauchter in my rium of Rennoche,¹ the quhilk causit my pure men therefter to bege and steill: Also, therefter, he moweit my brother and sum of my freindis to commit baith herschip and slauchter upoun the Laird of Luss: Also he persuadit myselve, with message to weir aganis the Laird of Boauhanene, quhilk I did refuse; for the quhilk I was contenowalie bostit (threatened) that he should be my unfriend; and quhen I did refuse his desire in that point, then intysit me with uther messengeris, as be the Laird of M^cknachtane and utheris of my freindis, to weir and truble the Laird of Luss; quhilk I behuffit to do for his fals boutgaittis (roundabout ways) Then quhen he saw I was at ane strait he cawsit me trow he was my guid freind; bot I did persave he was slaw therin; Then I made my moyan to pleis his Majestie and Lords of Counsall, baith of service and obedience, to puneische faultouris and to saif innozent men; and quhen Argyll was maid foresein (informed) thereof, he intysit me to stay and start fra thay conditions, causing me to understand that I was dissavit ; bot with fair wordis to put me in ane snair, that he mycht gett the lands of Kintyre in feyell (fee feu-farm) fra his Majestie, begane to putt at me and my kin ; The quhilk Argyll inventit, maist schamefullie, and persuadit the Laird of Ardkinlaiss to dissave me, quha was the man I did maist trest into ; bot God did releif me in the mean tyme to libertie maist narrowlie. Neuertheless, Argyll maid the oppin bruit (report) that Ardkinlaiss did all that by falsheid, by his Knowlege quhilk he did intyse me, with oft and sindrie messages, that he wald mak my peace and saif my lyfe and landis only to puneis certane faltouris of my kin, and my innosent freindis to renunce thair surname, and to leif peaseable. Vpone the quhilk conditione he was suorne be ane ayth to his freindis ; and they suorne to me ; and als I haif his warrand and handwrytt therevpon. The promeis. gif they be honestlie keipit, I let God be the Juge. And at our meting in oure awin chalmer, he was suorne to me in witnes of his awin freind. Attour, I confess befor God that he did all his craftie diligence to intyse me to slay and destroy the Laird Ardinkaippill, M^cKallay, for ony ganes kyndness or freidschip that he mycht do or gif me. The quhilk I did refuis, in respect of my faithfull promeis maid to M^ckallay of befor. Also he did all the diligence he culd to mowe me to slay the Laird of Ardkyndlas, in lykmaner ; bot I neuer grantit therto ; Throw the quhilk he did invy me grettumly. And now, seing God and man seis it is greidenes of warldlie geir quhilkis causis him to putt at me and my kin, and not the weill of the realme, nor to pacifie the samyn, nor to his Majesties honour, bot to putt down innosent men, to cause pure bairnes and infantis bege, and pure wemen to perisch for hunger, quhen thay ar hereit of thair geir ; The quhilk, I pray God that this faltis lycht not upon his Majestie heirefter, nor upon his successione. Quherfor I wald beseik God that his Majestie knew the weratie, that at this hour I wald be content to tak baneisment, with all my kin that was at the Laird of Lussis slaucgter, and all utheris of thame that ony falt can be laid to thair charge ; And his majestie of his mercie, to lat pure innosent men and young bairnes pass to libertie, and to lerne to leiff as innocent men ; The quhilk I wald fulfill, bot ony kynd of fail, quhilk wald be mair to the will of God, and his Majesties honour, nor the greidie cruell forme that is devysit, only for leuf of geir, haueing nether respect to God nor honestie.'

“Footnote. The Original of the very interesting paper now given, is preserved in the General Register House, and is in the hand of the then Clerk of Secret Council, James Primrose. It is marked as ‘Presentit be Mr Williame Hairt’ (of Livilands), as an article of evidence of his guilt at his trial. Glenstray had surrendered to Argyll, on condition of his being permitted to go to England ; by which the former meant that he should visit the English Court and have, if possible, access to the King. It was obviously Argyll’s policy to prevent this ; but that he might fulfil his promise, he sent him under a strong escort of troops, to beyond the river Tweed, at Berwick, where the soldiers wheeling to the right about, made Mac-Gregor retrace his steps. He was two days only in Edinburgh, after his return from England, when he was executed.—See Sir James Balfour's Annals.

“ In the Lord Treasurer's Books of Scotland, Nov. 1602, is the following entry : ‘ Item to Patrik M^comeis, messinger, passand of Edinburgh with lettres to charge Archibald Earle of Argyle to compeir personallie befor the Counsell, the xvi day of Dec. nixt, to ansuer to sic thingis as salbe inquirit at him, tuiching his lying at await for the Laird of Ardincapill, vpon set purpois to have slane him.’ Pitcairne next alludes to the Bond of Clanship between Glenstray and MacAulay of 1591 as on page 231, regarding which he adds : ‘ This instrument had as would seem, been discovered by the Government, and led to the suspicion that MacAulay had aided Glenstray in the feud of Glenfruin. MacAulay seems to have escaped death, by being under the protection of the Duke of Lennox, and forming one of his train or “ tail ” in the King's journey to England, to take possession of the English Throne.’

Chapter XXVII

Genealogical

ATTENTION must now again be turned to the Genealogy. The narrative in the "Baronage" at the period after the executions consequent on Glenfruin falls into a very regrettable error, asserting that the immediate successor of Glenstray was his illegitimate son. No such person appears in the "Records," and Ian dhu nan Lurach, Glenstray's brother, left three lawful sons, of whom Gregor, the eldest, eventually succeeded as de facto Chief. The source of this serious mistake cannot now be discovered, but the circumstances giving rise to it must have been very credibly related, before Sir John MacGregor Murray could have adopted such a statement.

For the better refutation of the error, the words of the "Baronage" are here quoted:—

"Alexander Laird of MacGregor leaving no lawful issue and his brother John being killed at Glenfruin unmarried,¹ the succession of this most ancient family jure sanguinis, most undoubtedly devolved upon Gregor, heir male in a direct line of John Laird of Macgregor No. 12. of these memoirs of whom afterwards. Soon after Alexander's death there was a meeting in the old church of Strathfillan, where in Gregor's absence the tribe called 'Sliochd dhiul chier' set up a Chief of their own in usurpation of his right; of which Gregor who was a very fine darling fellow having intelligence; hastened to the meeting and carried with him Gregor, a natural son of the last laird, a man of martial fire who had been bred in his family and was married to his (Gregor's) only daughter. Upon entering the Church he found the new elected Chief placed in a chair resembling a throne, above the rest; to him he immediately made up and throwing him under his feet, placed his son-in-law in the chair without any person daring to oppose, and he was thereafter acknowledged Chief by the whole Clan except by his brothers-in-law when they came of age."

As most Highland traditions are founded on fact, it is probable that such a scene may have taken place; although it does not match the ascertained circumstances at this time; the period, the actors, and even the alleged cause, may all have been different, and no one is likely now to be able to cast any light upon it.¹

John dhu nan Lurag, or "Black John of the Mail-coat," mentioned in the list of the chief houses of the Clan as "Johnne dhu M^cGregor, brother to the Laird M^cGregour," was a leading man in every fray. It is stated in the complaint made by Dalguise, 1602 (page 275), that "The said Johnne M^cGregour being in his own cradak in a rowme that he haldis of the Laird of Tullibardine," &c. This was the house or castle of Innis Gregor at the eastern end of Loch Voil, said to have been fortified on the land side by a fosse and drawbridge, and on the other three sides washed by the lake. The following account is from a memorandum taken down from the words of John Fergusson, a native of Stronvar, aged 60, in 1817, by the Rev. Alexander MacGregor, minister of Balquhidder, in reply to questions written out by Sir John MacGregor Murray:—

"Innis MhicGhrioghair on Loch Voil also called 'Geata 'n tuim bhain' belonged to John Dhu MacGregor who chased the Colquhouns at Glenfruin. There was a space between the island and the shore in the end of last century about six yards wide which space was filled up in 1762. It is said that a drawbridge connected the island with the mainland and the pillars of it could still be seen the end of the 18th century. John Fergusson 'remembers to have seen an old building there composed of lime and stone, and as it were a gentleman's House and place of defence.' It was 14 feet broad 60 feet in length within walls. He thinks the walls were 3 feet thick, he does not recollect how high the building was. He did not see any vault or arched room in it. The stones were afterwards used in filling up the intervening space between the island and the shore and in 1817 some were taken to surround the Innis with a dyke."²

At the conflict of Glenfruin John dhu was "killed by an arrow aimed by a stripling named M^cLintock, who succeeded in hitting him through the neck joint of his mail."

² In corroboration of the tradition of Innis Gregor it is stated that John dubh occupied the 2½ merkland of Mekill Stronvar (exactly opposite this island on Loch Voil) as also the five merkland of Glenbaich (on Loch Earn side).—See Chapter xxi. 1598, Oct. 21.

The following lines are from an old memorandum amongst the Edinchip papers :—

“ By MacGregor’s Bard at ye Battle of Glenfroom on seeing Lindsay of Bosville fall on the side of the Colquhouns.

“ Tierna bhun olla, ’scris olla mi chlai
B’chiar dun toll a hoana
’m foll moana na lai.”

“ By Colquhoun’s Bard on seeing John, brother of the Laird of MacGregor fall by the hands of M^cLintoch.

“ Stappi hug u’n tante orst bhic an Landarig og Thug Ian duh nan Lurich lot, mac ur bhic Gregoir voir.”

The spelling of the above is not very intelligible, but the correct reading is conjectured to be as follows :—

“ Tighearna Bhunolla,
’Cris olla mi chliaheamh
Bu chiar dubh fuil a’ choin
Am poll-moine na laidh.”

“ ’s tapaidh thug thu’n tionndadh ort,
Mhic an Leandaig oig
Thuit Iain dubh nan Luireach, Mac ur Mhic Ghriogair mhoir.”

which may be thus translated :—

“ Lord of Bunolla
And a woollen belt about his sword,
Dark was the black blood of a dog,
In a peat hag lying.”

“ Quickly you gave a turn
Young M^cLintoch
You gave a wound to Black John of the coat of mail
The fresh son of MacGregor.”

John dhu MacGregor, according to the “Black Book of Taymouth,” married a daughter of John Murray of Strowan, by whom he left three sons.

1. Gregor, who appears to have been in the custody of Sir John Murray of Tullibardin after his father’s death, and on whom devolved the succession to his uncle Allaster of Glenstray.

2. Patrick, of whom the Laird of Grant had charge.

3. Ewin, for whom John Murray of Strowan, his maternal grandfather, was answerable.¹

The death of Glenstray did not suffice to appease the wrath of those who desired the extermination of the Clan Gregor. The "Baronage" gives a fair abstract of the general condition of affairs in the time of the above Gregor.

"This Clan continued to be cruelly harassed through means of Argyle the Earl of Montrose chancellor, . . . and of George Buchanan,² Lord Privy Seal, who had much of the king's ear, and bore an ill will towards the MacGregors.

"To such a height of ferocity were matters carried, that a price being set upon the heads of the Clan by the Privy Council two of their enemies who had shared considerably of their estates, got blood hounds with which they hunted them, devouring and mangling them wherever they were found.

"But not only Glenurchy and the rest of that name employed themselves in this persecution, but all the Lords and Chiefs from the west to the north seas were enjoined to assist them ; so that it would have been impossible for one of them to escape had all their neighbours been spirited with the same zeal with those who had private views to their estates and possessions."

Alan, Chief of the Camerons, being then under a state of outlawry and prescription for joining the Marquis of Huntly against the

"earl of Murray his estate became a prey to the neighbouring chiefs. Argyle had made himself master of the twenty pound land of Lochiel which Alan endeavoured to recover the conditions were submitted to his Majesty, and Clanranald employed to negotiate for Alan but the King would not hearken to any proposals of being reconciled to Locheil, unless he would enter into an indenture with the Earl of Argyle his lieutenant, and the Earl of Dunbar, Lord High Treasurer for extirpating the MacGregors, to which Alan having accordingly agreed his Majesty was so well pleased with his compliance, that he wrote him a letter with his own hand ; in which after mentioning the conditions and ratifying the indenture against the MacGregors, he orders him faithfully and diligently to prosecute the same, until the final end thereof, in such form as you shall receive directions from the Earl of Argyll our Lieutenant.

"Pursuant to which there happened a fierce battle in the braes of Lochaber between a body of the Camerons and Macdonalds, and the MacGregors seconded by their allies, the Macphersons, in which the former were totally routed with “ considerable loss. And though Locheil and the other chiefs who had been in perpetual friendship with the MacGregors, soon penetrated into the interested designs of their principal enemies, and instead of distressing, protected them from their violence, yet so keen and powerful were the conductors of their destruction, that a very severe act was made against them in the succeeding reign, upon a narrative of the diction of those in possession of almost all their estates, whereby their name was proscribed, and all persons at liberty to mutilate or slay them, without being liable to law therefor nay encouraged to it by promise of their ‘moveables, goods, and gear.’

“ This barbarous law which is on record, made no distinction of age or sex, or character; five of their principal enemies, who had been raised upon their ruin, were for form’s sake appointed their judges while all persons were encouraged at short hand, to murder the MacGregors, whether greyhaired sires of many years, or the little babes who knew not how to offend; whether women or children; whether priests or laymen; whether rich or poor; whether innocent or guilty and all this says the Act ‘for the timeous preventing the disorder and oppressions that may fall out by the said name and Clan of MacGregor and their followers.’

“ In this situation the MacGregors continued till the solemn league and covenant came into play, which as their principal enemies were deeply interested in, afforded them some respite. They were much courted to join the confederacy, upon promises of future friendship but as rebellion against Majesty had ever been detestable to them and as they believed that the present purposes once served the future friendship of the foederati would at best be lukewarm they declared “That as they bore the crown upon the point of their swords, they could not fail to use the latter in support of the former.”

1604. April. It appears from a subsequent trial in the Court of Justiciary seven years later that it was in this month a skirmish took place in which Duncan Abroch lost his life. The following account of the occurrence is from the “Black Book of Taymouth” :—

“ Attoure Robert Campbell second son of the said Sir Duncan (Campbell of Glenurchy), persewing ane great number of thame throch the countrie, in end overtuk thame at Benetoeg¹ in the Brae of Glenurquhay, quhair he slew Duncan Abroch M^cGregour with his sone Gregore in Ardchyllie, Dougall M^cGregour M^cCoulcheir in Glengyle with his son Duncane, Charlis M^cGregour V^cEane in Braiklie quha wer principallis in that band, with tuentie otheris of thair complissis slain in the chais.”

In the subsequent Record of Assize, given fully in 1611, it is noted that certain MacGregors were present

“At the fecht or skirmische of Bintoiche in ye moneth of Apryle 1604, and Dougall M^cGregour Clerache M^cGregour” was accused “for ye crewall slaughter of umqle Gregour sone to umqle Duncane Abroche M^cGregour be schuteing of him with ane arrow behind his back committit in August 1604.”

In Sir Robert Gordon's history of the Earldom of Sutherland, quoted previously for his account of the conflict of Glenfruin, the following notice of the fight at Bintoig (or Ranefroy) appears:—

“The King caused proclaim them (the MacGregors) rebels, directed commission and lettres of intercommuning against them forbidding any of his lieges to harbor them. At last he employed the Earle of Argyle and the Campbells, who pursued them divers times; and at Bintoig wher Robert Campbell (The Laird of Glenurquhie his sone) accompanied with some of the ClanChameron, Clanab, and Clanronald to the number of two hundred chosen men fought against threescore (about one third the number of their opponents) of the ClanGregor in which conflict tuo of the ClanGregor were slain, to wit Duncan Aberigh (one of the chieftanes) and his son Duncan.¹ Seaven gentlemen of the Campbell syd wer killed, though they seemed to have the victorie. So after much slaughter, many skirmishes and divers slights used against the Clangregor in end they subdued them by the death of many of them and their followers and no lesse if not far greater slaughter of the Campbells.”

From the “Chartulary”:—

“Duncan Abroche of Ardchoille² grandson of Duncan Ladosach had fled to Lochaber after the deaths of his father and Grandfather in 1552 he gave a Bond 1576, he is not named in the list of persons denounced after the death of Drummondearnach (Feb. 4 1589), but his name appears Feb. 1 1592, as living at Corriechairmich part of the lands included in those of Ardchoille, and he was one of sixteen principal persons of the ClanGregor cited to appear personally before the Council at Stirling; again he and his brother Patrick are mentioned as ‘Duncan Abroch and Patrick Aldoch M^cGregors’ proposed parties in a bond by Allaster M^cGregor of Glenstray to the Earl of Argyll as King's Lieutenant in the bounds of the ClanGregor 22. April 1601. and are stated, as about to be bound ‘for themselves and all descending or to descend of umqle Duncan Latois thair predecessor.’

¹ In the previous account of the skirmish of Bintoig from the “Black Book of Taymouth,” the name of the son of Duncan Abberach, slain with him, is mentioned as Gregor, and in the subsequent trial of a person for shooting a son of Duncan's in the back, the name is also given as that of Gregor, but as the month of August is there mentioned, it is possible that one son perished at Bintoig and another a few months later by the shooting of an arrow. Duncan had a son by his first wife whose name is not mentioned in the “Baronage,” and who died young, but his other sons must have been of mature age in 1604, as Robert had a command at Glenfruin.

This bond however they did not sign. Patrick Aldoch perished with Glenstray, Jan. 1604."¹

Returning to the "Baronage," mention has been already made² of Robert, 2nd son of Duncan Abberach XVII., a man of a rare martial genius. He laid the plan of attacking the Colquhouns in battle. The command of a division was given to Robert, to whose gallant conduct much of the success of that victorious though unlucky day is attributed, and his sword is actually preserved to this day.³ His subsequent career is very interesting as it appears in the notices in State Records. Eventually, after a final submission in 1624, he was released from prison, August 1626, and delivered to Sir Donald M^cKy, Knight, to serve in the wars abroad under the charge of Count Mansfield, after which time nothing more is known of "Robin Abroch."

From the "Chartulary":—

³ This sword is in the possession of Sir Malcolm MacGregor of MacGregor having been handed down with the utmost care. It is mentioned in a letter from Colonel Evan Macgregor Murray (Sir John MacGregor Murray's father) as "Old Duncan Ladosach." The tradition is that it was borne at Glenfruin, when it appears to have been used by Robert Abroch, and a letter from Duncan MacGregor of MacGregor to his nephew, implies that "Duncan Abbergh" was not himself in action at Glenfruin.

Strange custom of the times, when men were so familiar with bloodshed and its ghastly emblems, these gentle citizens probably thought themselves less barbarous than Glenstra when driven to take upon him "MacAlpin's" fearful vow.

² Although Cumstrodden captured two MacGregors, and claimed a reward for the same, few of the Colquhouns kept up the enmity, which shews that the quarrel could only have been of recent origin, and Sir John MacGregor Murray makes the following remarks in private MS.:—"To the honour of the family of Colquhoun it may be said that, far from participating in or countenancing the subsequent oppressions of the MacGregors, carried on by interested neighbours, the Colquhouns naturally did not possess themselves of any of their lands, but actually protected many of the Clan, and some of the most respectable tenants on the Estate of Colquhoun at this day are MacGregors under the name of Colquhoun, assumed for protection and retained from gratitude."

It may here be mentioned that a tradition exists that Stewart, Earl of Londonderry, is descended from the ClanGregor. Sir John MacGregor Murray remarks:—

"MacGregor of Ardnaconnell is said not to have been in the Battle (Glenfruin), but he found it difficult to maintain his estate in peace, and being in the habit of intimate friendship with his neighbour, MacAulay of MacAulay, who had an estate in Ireland called Bally Law, he exchanged it with MacGregor of Ardnaconnell, who went to Ireland, where he assumed the name of Stewart, and the belief in the country is that he was the ancestor of the family of Londonderry."

The well-known and beautiful song, "MacGregor of Roro," is said to have been composed about this time, and is here given from "The Killin Collection of Gaelic Songs," by (late) Charles Stewart, Tigh 'n Duin, Killin.

After the fight at Glenfruin, when the Chief and fifteen of the principal men of the Clan were executed, amongst the number was "Gregour MacGregour M^cIndochie in Roro." "On the sad news reaching Glenlyon this lament was composed, but by whom is not known."

MACGREGOR OF RORO,¹

- 1 There is sorrow, deep sorrow,
Heavy sorrow down-weighs me ;
Sorrow long dark forlorn,
Whence nothing can raise me.
- 2 Yea my heart is filled with sorrow,
Deep sorrow undying
For MacGrigor of Roro
Whose home is Glenlyon.

For the bannered MacGrigor
So bravely who bore him,
With the roar of the war-pipe
Loud thundering before him.
- 3 His emblem the pine tree
On mountain-side swinging ;
His trim tapered arrows
The true bird was winging.
- 4 Trim shafts that a king's son
Might glory in bearing ;
From MacMurdoch's strong hand
Home they sped, how unerring.
- 5 Now I will not complain
Though a coward should smite ;
Should they wrong and outrage,
Oh heaven who shall right me ?
- 6 'Tis my pain they are not here
Whom living nought ailed me :
East in yon chapel lie
The true hearts that ne'er failed me.
- 7 Their fair heads are low,
My dear foster brothers ;
Them the scant linen shroud
In strait bed barely covers,
- 8 Linen shroud with no bands
Nor silk tassels made ready,
Nor sewed by the fingers
Of nobly born lady.

FROM the "Chartulary":—

Anent the Clangregour Forasmuch as albeit the course which was taen for exterminioun of the wicked and theivish race of the ClanGregour, has been mitigated and some oversight and permission granted unto them to live in the country and to enjoy the breath of their natural air upon hope that they moved with a hatred and detestation of their former evil life should have conformed themselves to his Majesty's obedience and studied by their good and peaceable behaviour, to have buried and put in oblivion their former misrule and insolence. Nevertheless the Lords of Secret Council are surely informed that the said MacGregor has begun to renew their former misdemeanours not only by committing of Stouths, reiffs, sorning, and oppressions upon his Majesty's peaceable good subjects but by ravishing and forcing of women and other odious and detestable villainies not Necessary it is that the noblemen, barons, and gentlemen of the bounds next adjacent to such lymmers be heard and such overtures as they can make, and give in, anent this mater be considered and embraced accordingly for which purpose ordains letters to be direct chairging Johnne Earl of Tullibardine, James Lord Ogilvie of Airly, James Lord Inchaffray, Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhy &a. &a. to compeir personally before the Lords of Secret Council upon the 13. day of Jan. next to give their best advice and opinion how the misrule and insolence of the said lymmers may be suppressed and the country freed of their farther trouble, under the pain of rebellion."

It has been already observed¹ that from the 28th February 1603 to the 7th August 1606, two entire folio volumes of the original minutes of the Privy Council are missing, having disappeared, according to Professor Masson's Introduction to the now published Register, "before the middle of the last century." In the publication mentioned, all other information as to the period missed out has been most carefully gathered together, but it is satisfactory to find how well Mr MacGregor Stirling had anticipated these labours as far back as sixty years ago. Any excerpts taken from Professor Masson's Collections instead of from Mr MacGregor Stirling's MS. will be acknowledged as so quoted.

The Earl not appearing, M^cLarrane being present, protests that he shall not be held to answer for them till again warned; and the Lords admit the protest.—Masson.

"1606. This year was in Scotland remarkable for a general pestilence both in town and country. All the Judicatories of the Kingdom were deserted except the Secret Council which met at intervals for a day at most, 'to keipe' as stated by the Willm ; Stirling of Achyll.—Luss Papers."

This paper is quoted verbatim by Mr MacGregor Stirling as above.

The different sums under which different men were bound is remarkable.

Sir William Fraser in the "Chiefs of Colquhoun" alludes to an Act of the Secret Council dated at Perth, 11th July 1606, by which Archibald Earl of Argyle was appointed "To charge them by his own precept to appear before him when and where he should appoint with power to grant respites and remissions in favour of such of them as would renounce their own surnames, and find caution to be and obedient to his majesty's laws in time coming."

Allusion is then made to the meeting at Downe of Menteith, but it is not given at length.

From Register of the Privy Council, by Dr Masson:—

"Privy Council Papers. 1607 (?).

"His Majestie at the first advertisment of M^cGregouris apprehensioun maid promise to give the Erle of Ergyle ane worthie reward, to remayne heretable with him and his aires heirafter. Seing now nocht only is the said M^cGregour apprehendit and delyverit, bot the greite pairt of all that clan and the best and choicest men of thame, quha nicht haif bein maist fearit, ar at commandiment, na doubt his Majestie wilbe moveit to continew that his resolutioun, and augment the rewaird rather than impaire the same in onyway, respect being had that, in procureing of this wark, the said Erle of Ergyle hes not only bein driven to intollerable toyll and payne in his awin persoun, bot also hes bestowit huge and greit sowmes of money, als weill in levieing of men as in particuler rewairdes to sum persones to effectuat this turne.

"The mater demandit is the gift of the landis of Kintyre; quhairin it wald be rememberit how small or na proffeit thay evir importeit to the King, his Majestie often tymes being driven to put the cuntrey to greitar chairges in the space of thrie or four yeir for getting in of the rent thairof, quhilk is nocht greit, than mycht haif doubled the pryce and utter valew of the haill land.

Now, this nobleman in actioun of blude being enterit with the said Clan Donald, nocht only will he procure thair ruitteing out and utter suppressing, bot upoun that same respect will evir be ane feir to those in the northe of Ireland to rebell, haveing ane

Quhairin the difficultye may be considerit quhilk the said Erll of Ergyle will haif in the removeing of that mischevous Clan, quhais actionis deservis na les than thair utter extirpatioun and ruiting out, thay being of nowmeries sa mony and of sa greit freyndschip that hardlye without greit bluide this turne may be effectuat ; and, sa lang as the said Clan Donald remaynes unremoveit furth of the saidis landis, his Majestie nor na utheris sal half any proffit, and the uncivilitie and barbaritie sall continew nocht only thair bot in the Iles.

“The Erle of Ergyle himself had the foirfaltour of thir same landis of Kintyre, the iles of Ilay, Jura, Coloula, Sunward, and Ardwa, all offerit unto him for

“1. There is no date to this paper, nor any indication who was the writer. Evidently, however, it is written in the interest of the Earl of Argyle, urging the Earl's claims on his Majesty for some reward for his services against the ClanGregor ; &, as the suggested reward,—an infestment of the Earl in the Lordship of Kintyre,—did not come till 30th. May 1607 (see Ratification of the infestment by the Parliament of 1617 : Acta Parl. Scot. iv. 559-560), the present paper must have been written before that date. It may even have been written in some year earlier than 1607 ; for the opening paragraph might be read as implying that the apprehension of the chief of the MacGregors and the crushing of his clan were rather recent events in the writer's mind. It may have taken time and argument to bring about the desired result.”

1607, in July, King James VI. granted to the Earl of Argyll² and his heirs part of the lands and lordship of Kintyre in reward for his services against the ClanGregor. The following royal letter addressed to David Murray, Lord Scone, his Majesty's Comptroller, is given in “The Chiefs of Colquhoun” from the original in the Argyll Charter Chest :—

taken with him for his trial and punishment, as appertains under the pain of rebellion &a or else to show a cause why &a with certification.—Record of Secret Council.”

The above accusation of a person called Allan oig M^cIntnach¹ (there is no proof of his having been a MacGregor), as having killed forty people without armour, is the nearest judicial mention of the alleged slaughter of young school boys at Glenfruin, but, even in this document, it does not appear to have been a solid or well grounded indictment, and may be now dismissed.

“1609. Nov. 1. The samyn day Harie Grahame. of Meadowlandes oftymes callit as cautioner and souertie for reporting letters (at the instance of Craigs, &a) To take souertie of Allaster Bowie M^cgregour — M^cIntyre domestick servitour to — Abroch M^cGregor of — and — M^ccaische ahochie in Drunkie for theft.”

From the “Chiefs of Colquhoun.”

“By the severe laws that had been enacted against the Macgregors, and from the rigour with which these laws were executed, the proscribed Clan were infuriated and driven to desperation. Placed beyond the pale of the protection of law, they often fiercely retaliated the wrongs which they believed had been done on them, on those who were empowered to punish them, by fire and sword. Against the Laird of Luss, who was invested with such a commission, they were exasperated to the uttermost, and they continued to harass the inhabitants of the Lennox keeping them in constant terror.”²

In a letter to King James VI. in the year 1609, Alexander Colquhoun renewed his complaints of the aggressions and spoliations which the Macgregors still committed on himself and his tenantry.

“Most Gracious Sovereigne,

“May it pleas your most sacred Maiestie I hhaif oftymes compleaned of the insolence and heaveye oppressioun committit vpoun me, my tennentis, and landis be the Clangregour, And haif bene forced to be silent this tyme bygain, Hoping that some tyme thair sould beine ane end thair of Bot now finding my selfe disapoynted and thame entered to thair former coursses Haif tane occasioun to acquent zour sacred Maiestie thairwith, beseiking zour Maiestie to haif pitie and compassioun vpoun ws zour Maiestie’s obedient subiectis and remanent pwire pepille quha sufferis, and to provyd tymous remeid thairin, and that zour Maiestie may be the better informed in the particularis I haif acquent zour Maiestie’s

“Rosdo, the 13 day of Nov. 1609.”

The version of the letter above given is taken from the “Chartulary” where it is entitled “Original of Letter preserved in Advocates’ Library, Edinburgh, in Sir James Balfour’s Collections”; it differs very slightly in spelling from the copy given by Sir William Fraser from the “Luss Papers.”

“Influenced by these and similar complaints, the Privy Council continued to adopt other severe measures against the Clan Gregor. Formerly, this clan when pursued betook themselves to the Lochs of Loch Long, Loch Goil, and Loch Lomond, and having the means of transportation to and from these Lochs, they found themselves secure, and defied the might of their enemies. The Lords of the Privy Council anticipated that now when the means of punishing them were put into active operation, the MacGregors according to their wonted manner would seek shelter in these lochs and would thus frustrate the measures of the Government against them. They therefore on 6 Sept. 1610¹ ordained that by public proclamation all his Majesty’s subjects who were owners of the boats and skows upon these lochs, should be prohibited from carrying any of the Clan Gregor, their wives, bairns, servants, or goods over for them, upon any pretence whatsoever, under the pain of being reputed and punished with all rigour as favourers and assisters of the said Clan in all their criminal enterprises.”²

From the “Chartulary” :—

A Series of Proclamations and Edicts were made at this time.

It may be from this inferred that the proposals of the Master of Tullibardine were counter to those of the Earl of Argyll.

"Commissions against the Clangregour.

"Forasmuch as the wicked and rebellious thieves and limmers callet the Clan-Gregour who so long have continued in blood, theft, murder, sorning and oppression to the wrack, misery and undoing of a great number of his Majestie's poor subjects not contenting themselves to live under the obedience of his Majesty and his laws when now the whole remaining Clans as well of the Highlands as of the Isles are become answerable and obedient, but preferring their bygone wicked and unhappy trade of evil doing, to civility and obedience of the law and being divers tymes dealt with to have forsaken their former lewd doings and to have embraced a peaceable and quiet form of living They do notwithstanding continue in all kind of impiety and wickedness, and have amassed themselves together awaiting times and occasions to prosecute their detestable and thievish doings against his Majesty's poor people where they may be masters and commanders highly to his Majesty's offence and disregard of his Majesty's authority, and his Majesty and Lords of secret Council having resolved to pursue this infamous 'byke' of lawless limmers with fire and sword, and by the force of his Majesty's royal authority to reduce them to obedience, And understanding the good and willing disposition of the persons underwritten to do his Majesty service, and to employ their own persons and their friends in the pursuit and prosecution of the said limmers Therefore the said Lords ordain commissions to be past under his Majesty's signet to the persons particularly underwritten within the bounds following, viz. to William Lord Tullibardin, Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhay & a & a (a long list of the commissioners and their districts follows but may be here omitted). Giving, granting and committing to the Commissioners particularly above written within the bounds particularly above specified full power, commission and authority, express bidding and charge To convocate his Majesty's lieges in Arms and to pass, search, seek, hunt, follow and pursue all and whatsoever persons of the ClanGregor, their followers, assisters and partakers wherever they may be apprehended and to prosecute them with fire and sword and to take them and put them to his Majesty's privy Council to be taken order with and punished for their offences conforme to the laws of this Realm And if it so happen the said ClanGregor their assisters and partakers for eschewing of apprehension, to flee to strengths and houses, with power to the said commissioners to follow and pursue them, besiege the said strengthes and houses, raise fire, and use all kind of force and warlike engine that can be had for wyunning and recovery thereof, and apprehension of the said limmers being there intill, and if in pursuit of the said limmers they refusing to be taken or besieging of the said strengths or houses, it shall happen the said limmers or any of their assisters and partakers, or any being in company with them and assisting them, or within the said strengths and houses, to be hurt, slain, or mutilated, or any other inconvenient whatsoever to follow, the said Lords decern and declare that the same shall not be imputed as crime nor offence to the said commissioners nor persons assisting them to the execution of this commission nor that they nor none of them shall be called or accused therefore criminally nor civilly by any manner of way in time coming notwithstanding whatsoever, acts, statutes, or constitutions made to the contrary whereanent the said Lords dispense by these presents . . . with power also to the said commissioners and persons assisting them in the execution of this commission To beir, weir, and use hacquebuts and pistolettis in the execution of the said commission. And generally to do use and exerce all and sundry other thaing which for executing of the said commission are requisite and necessary, firm and stable, holding and for to hald all and whatsoever things shall be lawfully done herein charging hereby his Majesty's lieges and subjects to reverence, acknowledge, and obey, concur, fortify, and assist the said commissioners in all and everything tending to the execution of the commission as they and each of them will answer upon their obedience at their highest peril.

“Forasmuch as the King's majesty by the power and force of his Royal authority has now reduced to a perfect and settled obedience the whole Isles of this kingdom and continent next adjacent The principals and chieftains of the whole Isles and continent are come to his Majesty's Council and have found good surety for their obedience hereafter so that now no part of the heylands is rebellious but so much as is possessed by that infamous byke of barborous and detestable lymmars called the ClanGregor who being void of the fear of God and of that due obedience which they owed to his Majesty and preferring their bygane thievish and unhappy trade of theft, reiff sorning and oppression to the fear of punishment which his Majesty in his justice has resolved to inflict upon them and contemning his Majesty's lenity and long patience in suffering them to run headlong so long, in all kind of impiety They do yet continue in their wicked deeds, have ammassed themselves in companies taking their advantage of every occasion to trouble, wraik, and oppress their neighbours where they may be masters and his Majesty and Lords of secret council resolving no longer to bear with the rebellion and contempt of their rebellious and detestable lymmers but in his wrath and justice by power and force to reduce them to conformity, has for this effect given order and commission to the Sheriff of Perth and Stewarts of Stratharne and Manteith and their deputies every one of them in their bounds and to . . . to pursue the said thieves lymmers with fire and sword and all kind of rigour and extremity and never to leave off the pursuit of them until they be reduced to obedience As in the commissions granted to them respectively thereupon at length is contained. In the execution whereof necessary it is that they be well and substantially accompanied with the power and force of his Majesty's peaceable and good subjects dwelling within the bounds of their commissions for which purpose the Lords of secret Council ordain letters to be directed charging all and sundry his Majesty's lieges and subjects dwelling within the bounds of the Sheriffdoms of Stewartries and cuntreys respectively abone written by open proclamation at the market crosses of the head boroughs of the same That they and every one of them well armed in their most substantial and warlike manner prepare themselves and be in readiness to rise, concur, fortify, and assist the said commissioners in all and everything tending to the execution of this commission and for this effect To convene and meet them at such days, times, and places and with so many days victuals and provisions as they shall be advertised by their proclamations, missive letters or otherwise and to follow their direction in everything according as they shall be commanded in the execution of this commission as they and every one of them will answer & a & a," the usual clauses at the end.

“Proclamation that none resett the ClanGregour.

“Forasmuch as the King's Majesty by the power and force of his royal authority having now reduced to a perfect and settled obedience the whole Isles of this kingdom, and continent next adjacent The inhabitants whereof being void of the fear and Knowledge of God and of that due reverence which they ought to have carried to their Sovereign Prince, and consequently exercising themselves in blood, theft, reiff and oppression are now most happily brought to a reasonable conformity both in the one and in the other, and chieftains and principals of them are come to his Majesty's council and have found good surety for their obedience hereafter So that no part of the Highlands is rebellious and disobedient but so much as is possessed by that infamous byke of barbarous and detestable thieves and lymmers called the ClanGregour who some years ago having felt the weight of his Majesty's heavy wrath and displeasure against them by the apprehension and execution to the deid of a great many of the principal ringleaders of that infamous society and it being thought that the remanent who were spared at that time should have 'preissit' by their peaceable and quiet behaviour to have averted his Majesty's displeasure against them that thereby they might have been suffered to have lived in the country in the rank and condition of lawfull and lawbiding subjects, Nevertheless such is the perverse and wicked disposition of that barbarous and wicked society that being careless of the vengeance taken upon the rest of their fellows and preferring their unhappy trade of theft, reiff, and murder, sorning, and oppression to the fear of punishment which his Majesty in his justice has resolved to inflict upon them, They have continued and do yet continue in their evil doings taking their advantage of every occasion to trouble, wrack, and oppress their neighbours where they may be masters whereunto they are the rather encouraged by the unworthy behaviour of a great many of the barons and gentlemen of the country who not only most unlawfully are assured and under bands of friendship with the said thieves, but by their connivance and oversight, they have free passage through their bounds, and country in their theftuous deeds, and are resett, supplied, protected and maintained by them, as if they were lawful subjects, highly to his Majesty's offence, and to the shame and discredit of those who are assured with them, and who are their protectors and reseters. And his Majesty and the said Lords finding it a discredit to the country that a handful of miserable caitifs shall be suffered longer to have continuance within the country Or that any lawful subjects shall be under assurance with them Therefore ordain letters to be directed To command, charge and inhibit all and sundry his Majesty's lieges and subjects of what estate, degree, quality, or condition soever they be, by open proclamation at all places needful, That none of them presume nor take upon hand to resett, or supply any of the ClanGregor, their wives, children or servants, nor to intercommune with them, nor yet to resett, hoard, or keep their goods or geir, or to 'bloke' or bargain with them thereanent, nor keep trysts, conventions, nor meetings with them under the pain to be reputed hald and esteemed as art and parttakers with them, in all their theftuous and wicked deeds, and to be pursued and punished for the same with all rigour and extremity to the terror of others, And the same to command and charge all and sundry his Majesty's lieges and subjects who are under assurance or bands of friendship with the said thieves and lymmers, To renounce and discharge the same bands and assurances, and to enter into no such fellowship, or society, with them hereafter, but to repute and hold them as traitors to God, their prnce, and country, and accordingly to pursue them with their whole power and forces, Certifying them who shall stand and continue under the said assurances, and bands of friendship, with the said lymmers after the publication hereof that they shall be repute, holden, and esteemed as guilty with them in all their evil deeds, and shall be punished therefore accordingly.—Record of Secret Council Acta."

The above proclamations show, indeed, that war with the small "handful" of the doomed Clan who survived, was to be waged without respite. The Chiefs of the two principal Houses had fallen, together with many of the other most valiant and experienced leaders, but the spirit of a brave race remained unbroken, and still struck terror into their enemies. Evidently there were many friends who, whether from sympathy with their courage, or from timidity, still gave them shelter and countenance, which secret favour alone can explain their having contrived to subsist, when every way of living honestly was denied them.

Next follow two proclamations on the subject of forbidding the transport of any of the Clan across the numerous Lochs which intersected their country, and to which allusion has been made in an extract from the "Chiefs of Colquhoun."¹ If, turning from the dry record of legal entries, the Highland country scene with living figures can be pictured, the hasty arrival on the shore, of the fugitives whether armed men or aged decrepid "bodachs," anxious women and young children, all eager to be ferried across to escape from cruel enemies, rowed over by the strong arms of trusty friends, and hastening to find a brief shelter on the opposite shore till driven forth again, deep must be the sympathy of their descendants. Thus runs the proclamation to stop these means of temporary respite :—

"1610. Sep. 6. at Edinburgh. Proclamation that nane transport the Clangregor over Loichlung and other Lochs.

"Forasmuch as the King's Majesty having given order and direction for pursuit of the rebellious and barbarous thieves and lymmers called the Clangregor by whom the peaceable subjects of the in-country are heavily oppressed, troubled, and wracked and the execution of the service being now in hands and some good and happy success expected in that errand, it is very likely that the said thieves according to their wonted manner when as formerly they wer pursued, shall have their recourse to the Lochs of Lochlung, Lochegyll and Loich Lowmound, and thir having the commodity to be transported to and from the said Lochs they will frustrate and disappoint the intended service against them, Therefore the Lords of Secret Council ordain Letters to be directed to command, charge, and inhibit all and sundry his Majesty's lieges and subjects, owners of the boats, and scoutts, upon the said lochs that none of them presume, nor take upon hand, to transport any of the ClanGregor, their wives, children, servants or goods, over the said Lochs upon whatsoever colour, or pretence, under pane to be repute, holden, and esteemed as favourers, assisters, art and part takers with the said ClanGregor in all their thievish and wicked deeds, and to be pursued and punished therefor with all rigour in example to others, and farther to command and charge the masters and owners of the said boats and scouts, To find caution and surety acted in the books of Secret Council That they shall not transport any of the ClanGregor their wives, children, servants or goods over the said Lochs each of them under the pain of 500 merks and that they find the said surety in manner foresaid within six days next, after they be charged thereto which six days being bypast and the said surety not being found In that case the said Lords give power and commission to his Majesty's commissioners within the bounds of the Sherrifdom of Dumbarton, To intromitt with the said boats and scouts and to remove them off the said Lochs and to keep them off the same so long as the service against the ClanGregor is in hands.

“Proclamation for concurring with the commissioners against the ClanGregor.

“Forasmuch as the King's Majesty and Lords of Secret Council having past and expedite certain commissions to some special barons and gentlemen in the Lennox for the pursuit of the wicked and rebellious thieves and lymmers called the ClanGregor, by whom the peaceable and good subjects within the Lennox are heavily oppressed, troubled, and wrakit, and proclamations being past and lawfully executed for charging of the inhabitants within the Sherrifdome of Dumbarton, to concur with his Majesty's commissioners in the execution of his Majesty's service, against the said lymmers, The said inhabitants do notwithstanding refuse all concurrence and assistance with his Majesty's commissioners so that the execution of his Majesty's service is like to be frustrated and disappointed unless remedy be provided, Therefore the Lords of Secret Council have declared and by these presents declare and ordain that the escheits of all and sundry persons within the bounds of the Sherrifdome of Dumbartane who shall refuse to give their concurrence and assistance to his Majesty's commissioners foresaid in the execution of his Majesty's service against the ClanGregor shall be gifted and disponed to the said commissioners and they shall have warrand, commission, and authority from the said Lords to meddle and intromit therewith and to dispone thereupon at their pleasure and ordain letters of publication to be directed there upon whairthro none pretend ignorance of the same—Record of Secret Council Acta.”

On the 24th August the same year, a commission, worded very much the same as those of the 14th of August, was given to John, Earl of Atholl, and John, Earl of Tullibardin, to pursew the ClanGregor with fire and sword.

“1610. Item to the Laird of Lawers for undertaking of service against the MacGregors. His acquittance upon the receipt thereof bears £1200.—Lord High Treasurer's Books.

“1610. Sep. 24. Charge anent the Houses of Garth, Glenlyoun and Balquhiddy.

“Forasmuch as for the better fartherance of the King's Majesty's service against the ClanGregour necessary it is the houses of Garth, Glenlyoun and Balquhider, be made patent and ready to Allan Cameroun of Lochyell and Alexander M^cRannald of Gargavach two of his Majestys commissioners specially directed and employed in that service, for the resett of them, their viuers, and servants at all such times as they shall have occasion to repair to the said houses during the time that the service foresaid is in hands Therefore ordain letters to be directed charging Johnne Erl of Tullibardin Campbell of Glenlyoun, Sir William Stewart Knt. and all others havears, keepers, and detainers of said houses To make the same houses patent and ready for receiving of the said commissioners, their servants, and vivers, at all such times as they shall have occasion to be resett within the same, during the time of that service, as the persons foresaid, keepers of the said houses, will answer to his Majesty and his Council at their highest peril and under the pain to be repute holden and esteemed as favouers, assisters, and partakers, with the said ClanGregour in all their evil deeds and to be pursued and punished for the same with all rigour and extremity, in example of others.—Record of Council Acta.”

The task of hunting down the MacGregors, had, it appears, been entrusted to Cameron of Locheil and Clanranald. The traditions on which the narrative in the “Baronage” was based, agree with this fact now proved by the “Records,” and the “Baronage” adds that the two war-like Clans who accepted the commission in a short time “penetrated into the interested designs of their enemies and again befriended the ClanGregor.” Two points may here be remarked. In the preceding century different noblemen or chiefs took out “Letters” of fire and sword, for which privilege they were willing to pay a contribution into the State exchequer, but in the reign of King James VI. commissions were given by the government to certain noblemen and others, and large sums were paid to them as a reward for services which formerly were considered in the light of an agreeable foray; the second point is that Clans from a distance were chosen for the duty, and although the heads of the great Campbell houses were the constant and mortal enemies of the ClanGregor and the chief inheritors of any spoils that could be got from them, yet the Campbell clansmen were seldom, if ever, brought into conflict with the MacGregors, as their battles appear to have been fought by other Clans.

“1610. Sep. 24. Charge against Highlandmen.

“Forasmuch as Allane Cameroun of Lochyell and Allaster M^cRannald of Gargavaich being employed and directed in his Majesty's service against the Clan-Gregor, and they having desired the persons underwritten, They are to say & a who are their own friends, servants and dependers To join, concurr assist and pass forward with them in that service The said persons most undutifully have refused their concurrence and assistance, in his Majesty's service foresaid, testifying thereby that they are favourers of the said ClanGregor and doing what in them lies to frustrate and disappoint the course intended against them for reducing of them to his Majesty's obedience, to the offence and contempt of our Sovereign Lord and misregard of his Majesty's authority, and Laws. Therefore the Lords of Secret Council ordain letters to be directed charging persons above written to compeir personally before the said Lords upon day of To answer to the premises and to underlye such punishment as shall be enjoined to them for the same, under the pain of rebellion, & a with certification.—Record of Council Acta.

“1610. Sep. 24. Charge against the resetters of the ClanGregor.

“Forasmuch as the King's Majesty in his just wrath and indignation against the unhappy race of the ClanGregor having given order and direction for the pursuit of them with all kind of hostility and reducing of them to his Majesty's obedience, and for the better furtherance and execution of this service, having by public proclamation prohibited and discharged all his Majesty's subjects in any ways to resett, supply, and assist the ClanGregour or to resett, hoard and conceal their goods, Notwithstanding it is of truth that the persons underwritten they are to say, & a have at divers and sundry times since the publishing of this proclamation resett certain of the ClanGregor, their wives, bairns, and goods, have supplied them with victuals, armour, and other necessaries comfortable to them, and thereby have encouraged them to continue in their rebellion in contempt of our Sovereign Lord and misregard of his Majesty's authority. Therefore letters to be directed charging the persons particularly above written to compeir personally before the said Lords & a.—Record of Secret Council Acta.

“1610. Oct. 4: At Edinburgh.

“Proclamation for concurring with the Commissioners against the ClanGregor.

“Forasmuch as the Lords of Secret Council having past and expedite certain commissions to Walter Lord Blantyre, Alexander Colhoun of Luss, Buchannane of that Ilk, Sir James Edmestoune of Duntreithe ——— Sempill of Foulwode and Johne M^cfarlane of Arroquhair, making them conjunctly and severally his Majesty's Justices and commissioners within the Sherrifdome of Dumbartane for the pursuit of the barborous thieves and lymmars called the Clan-Gregour. Necessary it is for the better execution of the said commission and furtherance of his Majesty's service, that the said commissioners have the concurrence and assistance of the inhabitants within the parishes of Inchealloch Drummen, Killearn, Balfrone, Fintry, Strablane, Campsie, and Baddernoch, for which purpose ordain letters & a.

"1610. Oct. Item to the Laird of M^cRonald, for himself and Allane M^cIldowie, And to M^cColl clapen,¹ appointed by his Majesty's direction to attend upon them for putting in execution his grace service in the Highlands as his Majesty's warrant bears £3566.—Lord High Treasurer's Books.

"In Nov. 1610. several close letters were sent from Court to Allan M^cIldowie the Laird of M^cRonald and to various Lairds in Athole and elsewhere.

"Letter from the Chancellor ——— to the Laird of Arirtully 1611."

From the introduction to Vol. ix. of "The Register of the Privy Council of Scotland," edited by David Masson, LL.D., some appropriate passages may now be quoted.

"All the while that the Hebrides, and the fringe of Mainland coast most immediately connected with them, were being managed in the manner described, a dreadful business had been separately going on in that nearer and more inland portion of the main Highlands which stretches from the northern shores of Loch Long and Loch Lomond over the wild junctions of Stirlingshire and Dumbartonshire with Perthshire and Argyleshire. This was the continued or renewed Persecution of the ClanGregor. It is a sickening story, forming the matter of a larger series of entries in this volume than any other single subject. For many years already, as many previous volumes have shown, this Clan of the Macgregors had been the object of the most vehement hatred of the central Government, and the one doomed and unpardonable Clan in all the Highlands. 'The wicked and unhapie race of the ClanGregour, quha sa lang hes continewit in bluid, thif reif, and oppressioun' is a recurring phrase against them in proclamations and other publick documents of the years when James was King of Scotland only. The culmination of vengeance against them however, had been in April 1603, the very month of the King's departure from Scotland into England. It was in that month that, in consequence of a new and crowning offence of the Macgregors in the preceding February, in that Battle of Glenfruin fought by them against the Colquhouns of Luss, the Buchanans, and others, which figures in the criminal records as the Massacre of Glenfruin, there was passed the tremendous Act of the Scottish Council proscribing the Clan utterly, and decreeing under pain of death, the disuse of the very name of Macgregor by all persons of the Clan. Of this Act, describable from it's date as literally James's parting gift to Scotland, and the chief agent in the execution of which was the Earl of Argyle, the effects may be traced in various incidents of the immediately subsequent years, one of them being the hanging and quartering at the Market Cross of Edinburgh, on the 20 Jan. 1604, of Alexander MacGregor of Glenstrae, the Chief of the Clan, and eleven of his principal kinsmen and retainers. Naturally, however, it was impossible to carry out such an Act thoroughly and from 1604 onwards there had been a comparative lull in the proceedings against the

Macgregors. A lull only, for now the King having set himself in earnest to the enterprise of the complete subjugation of the Highlands and Islands, the Macgregors were again remembered. One would have thought that, by tolerably wise management, such as Bishop Knox had applied to the Western Islands, it might have been easy by this time to bring within terms of judicious mercy the few scores of families that constituted the remains of the broken and nameless Clan. This was not the course that suited the policy of those days, or the interests of those concerned. The course actually adopted was one with which Bishop Knox, if one judges him rightly, would have refused to have anything to do. There was to be a war of absolute extermination against the Macgregors root and branch. The campaign was opened in August 1610. From that date to the end of our volume the horrible business may be chronologised as follows :—

“A Series of Proclamations.

“Proclamation of August 1610.¹ (Comment) In other words they were to be put beyond the pale of society and hunted down as mere vermin.

“Sep. and Oct. Evidence that the Commission is having some effect, the Macgregor hunting having begun, and the clan being in flight hither and thither, but especially towards their old haunts of Loch Long, Loch Goil and Loch Lomond. Orders for preventing them having the use of the boats or ferries on these Lochs. Some captive MacGregors in the hands of the authorities in Edinburgh. Evidence at the same time that the lieges in some parts of the Macgregor-infested region are in sympathy with the fugitives or at least very backward in assisting in the pursuit of them.

“Nov. 1610—Jan. 1611. Macgregor-hunting apparently over for the season.

“Jan. and Feb. 1611. Great signs of renewed activity against the Macgregors, who have now turned at bay and are showing fight. In the course of January, if not before, they had shut themselves up in the island of Loch Katrine ‘whilk thay haif fortifeit with men, victuall, poulder, bullett, and uther weirlyke furnitour, intending to keepe the same as ane place of weare and defence.’ Accordingly on the 31st of that month, the Council having gone to Stirling to concert the necessary measures, there is a cluster of resolutions. A number of the Commissioners, who are personally present, are instructed and undertake, ‘to go to the feildis and to enter in actioun and bloode’ within the next fourteen days, the service to be at their own charges for a month from that date ; after which they are to be assisted, if needful, with 100 men at his Majesty’s charges. The hope being that ‘thir woulfis and thevis’ may now be destroyed at one effort ‘in thair awne den and hoill’ there is order for all the lieges between sixteen and sixty years of age, within certain specified bounds to be at the head of Lochlomond well armed on the 12. of Feb. thence to carry all required boats to Loch Katrine for use in the intended siege,—two pieces of ordnance one afterwards finds, to be sent from Stirling Castle for the same purpose. By way of precaution in case the siege should fail and the Macgregors escape, letters were sent to nobles and lairds within whose bounds the fugitives were likely to pass. Accompanying these aggressive measures however there were proofs that the Council knew that the extreme severities against the Macgregors were becoming more and more unpopular. Not only had there to be warning to 'a grite many of the baronis and gentlemen' not to continue their favour to the clan; but there was a redefinition or modification of his Majesty's policy against the clan to meet squeamish objections. His Majesty 'in his accustomed dispositioun to clemencie and mercye' would distinguish between the poorer wretches of the clan and their chiefs or ringleaders. Six of these chiefs and ringleaders were therefore named, viz.

Duncan M^cEwan Macgregor called the Laird or Tutor.¹

with a promise of a reward of £1000 to anyone that should slay anyone of these, and of a reward of at least 100 merks for the head of any inferior Macgregor; while anyone of the clan that desired to separate from the rest and come to his Majesty's peace might earn his pardon by bringing in the head of any other Macgregor of the same rank as himself. So matters stood on the 31 Jan. and, with the exception that on the 12 Feb. one wretched Highlander of another clan delivered 'ane M^cGregouris heid' to the Council in Edinburgh and got 100 merks for it, we have to pass to the end of Feb. for further information, Then it appears that the projected expedition to Loch Katrine had entirely collapsed, and that the Macgregors had got clear away from their island fastness on that loch, without 'so muche as any mynt or show of persute.' Eight of the commissioners with the Earl of Tullibardine at their head were consequently under rebuke.

"March 1611. No special entry in the Macgregor business."

The other entries and notices do not differ materially from those elsewhere recorded.

Jan 14. 1614. After alluding to the submission of Robert Abroch, Dr Masson remarks

"That even after this desertion of the Macgregors by their latest captain there was some unsubdued remnant of them wandering about somewhere or at least that the dangerous Macgregor spirit was not regarded as extinct among the broken and dispersed fragments of the clan is proved by the Act of Council, 26 Jan. 1613.

“The persecution of the Macgregors it will be seen was not yet over. It was to continue for years yet to come. No need to anticipate what the ‘Records’ of these years may have to tell, but even at this point one cannot avoid remarking how intimately this persecution of the Macgregors, like so many other Highland transactions, is inwound with the history and traditions of the great house of Argyle. Five and twenty years hence when Charles I. was on the throne that Archibald Campbell 7th Earl of Argyle who was now so active against the Macgregors was to be living in London as a mild old Roman Catholick gentleman who had been for a while in the Spanish service abroad, and had been sequestered from his Scottish estate and honours on account of his change of religion; and one wonders whether in those later and more pensive days of his life, spectres of the butchered Macgregors of 1610-13 and of their wives with the key-mark branded on their faces, ever came to his bedside.

“The which day in presence of the Lords of Secret Council compeired personally Johnne Earl of Tullibardin, William Lord Murray his son, Hary Lord Sanctcolme, Sir Duncane Campbell of Glenurquhy, Knt. Alexander Colhoun of Luss, Sir George Buquhannane of that Ilk, James Campbell of Laweris, and Andro M’farlane of Arroquhair and undertook the service against the ClanGregor, and promised to go to the field, and to enter in actioun and blood with them, betwix and the 13. day of Feb. next. and to prosecute the service for a month thereafter upon their own charges, and after that the King’s Majesty’s to bear the charges of one hundred men to assist them and they to bear the charges and expenses of another hundred men till the service be ended, and that they shall do some notable service against the ClanGregour before his Majesty be burdened with any charges in this service.

“For the better furtherance of the which service Alexander Earl of Linlithgow and James Earl of Perth, promised either of them to furnish fifteen men well armed at their own charges, which shall join in action at the first with his Majesty’s said commissioners, and assist them for the space of the said first month, and thereafter his Majesty to bear the one half of their charges, and the said two Earls the other half of their charges.

“The which day compeired personally Campbell of Lundy¹ for the country of Argyle, and Alexander Menyeis of Weyme, Sir James Stewart of Balleachane and John Stewart Neilson for the country of Athoill and promised to guard the said countrys, and to keep the MacGregors furth thereof.

“The Lords ordain a missive to be written to Duncane Campbell Captain of Carrick to remove the whole boats out of Lochlung and Lochgoyll to the effect the ClanGregour have no passage by these Lochs.

“Forasmuch as this rebellion and proud contempt of his Majesty’s royall authority professed and avowed by the rebellious thieves and lymmars called the ClanGregour, who so long have continued in committing of blood, theft, reiff and oppression upon the King’s Majesty’s peaceable and good subjects, having most justly procured his Majesty’s heavy wrath and indignation, and the force and severity of his royall power to be executed against them which his Majesty has resolved to prosecute till they be reduced to obedience, yet his Majesty in his accustomed disposition to clemency and mercy being well willing to show favour to such of them who by some notable service shall give proof and testimony of the hatred and detestation which they have of the wicked doings of that unhappy race, and will be content to live hereafter under the obedience of his Majesty’s laws, his Majesty knowing perfectly that a great many of them who are now imbarcked in that rebellious society and fellowship have rather been induced thereunto by the cruelty of the Chieftains and ringleaders of the same society than by any disposition and inclination of their own Therefore the Lords of Secret Council have promised and by these presents promise That whatsoever person or persons of the name of MacGregor, who shall slay any person or persons of the same name being of as good rank and quality as himself and shall prove the same slaughter before the said Lords—That every such person slayer of a MacGregor of the rank and quality foresaid shall have a free pardon and remission for all his bygone faults, he finding surety to be answerable and obedient to the laws in time coming And suchlike that whatsomever other person or persons will slay any of the particular persons underwritten They are to say.

Chieftains and ringleaders of these M^cGregors a thousand pounds apiece and that letters be directed to make publication by open proclamation at the market crosses of Dumbartane, Striveling, Doune in Menteith, Glasgu. and Auchterardour.

“Forasmuch as one of the chief and principal causes which has procured the proud and avowed rebellion and disobedience of the wicked thieves and lymmars of the ClanGregour against his Majesty and his authority, now at this time when as the hail corners of his Majesty’s dominions by the power and force of his Majesty’s royal authority are reduced to obedience has proceeded and doth proceed from the unworthy behaviour of a great many of the barons and gentlemen of the country, who not only grant them free passage through their bounds and countrys in their thievish deeds, but reset, supply, protect, and maintain them as if they were lawful subjects highly to his Majesty’s offence and to the shame and discredit of the same resetters and seeing there is some course now taken whereby these infamous lymmars may be reduced to the acknowledging their iniquities, and to the conformity, and obedience of his Majesty’s laws wherein some good success is constantly expected, if the reset and protection of them be refused and forborne his Majesty in his just wrath having resolved to punish the said protectors and resetters without all favour and mercy. Therefore the Lords of Secret Council ordain letters to be directed charging officers of arms to pass to the market crosses of Stirling, Dumbarton, Glasgu, Perth, Auchtirardour, Downe in Menteith and other places needful and there by open proclamation to command, charge, and inhibit all and sundry his Majesty’s lieges, and subjects of what estate quality or degree soever they may be that none of them presume or take upon hand to reset supply or intercomoun with the said ClanGregour, their wives or bairns nor to keep conventions, trysts nor meetings with them nor to reset or hold their goods, or geir or to make blokes or bargains with them thereanent, under the pain to be repute, holden and esteemed as part-takers with them in all their wicked deeds and certifying them that fail and do the contrary that not only shall they be pursued and punished therefor in their persons with all rigour and extremity but they their persons, lands, and goods shall be proclaimed free to his Majesty’s commissioners who are employed in service against the ClanGregour to be pursued by them with fire and sword as if they were of the race of the MacGregours themselves.

“Forasmuch as the wicked and rebellious thieves and lymmars called the ClanGregor who so long have continued in committing all kind of iniquity and barbarity upon his Majesty’s peaceable and good subjects in all parts where they may be masters and commanders being now despairing and out of all hope to receive our favour or mercy seeing their own guilty consciences bear them testimony and record that their detestable and barbarous conversation has so far exceeded the limits of grace and favour that nothing can be expected, but his Majesty’s just wrath to be prosecuted against them with all severity. They have now amassed themselves together in the Islæ of Lochkitterine¹ which they have fortified with men, victual, poulder, bullet and other warlike furniture intending to keep the same as a place of war and defence for withstanding and resisting of his Majesty's forces appointed to pursue them and seeing there is now some solid and substantial course and order set down how these wolves and thieves may be pursued within their own den and hole by the force and power of some of his Majesty's faithful and well affected subjects, who freely have undertaken the service, and will prosecute the same without any private respect, or consideration, in so far as the execution of this service, that the haill boats and birlings being upon Loch Lowmond be transported from the said loch to the loch foresaid of Lochkitterine, whereby the forces appointed for the pursuit of the said wolves, and thieves may be transported in to the said Isle which can not goodly be done but by the presence and assistance of a great number of people Therefore ordain letters to be direct to command and charge all and sundry his Majesty's lieges, and subjects, betwix sixty and sixteen years within the bounds of the Sherrifdom of Dumbarton, Stewartry of Menteith and six parishes of the Lennox within the Sherrifdom of Stirling by open proclamation at the market crosses of Dumbarton, Stirling, and Downe in Menteith, That they and every one of thae, weele bodin in feir of weir for their own defence, and surety convene, and meet at the head of Lochlowmond upon the 13. day of Feb. now approaching and to transport and carry from the said loch the haill boats and birlings being upon the same, to the said Loch of Lochketterine whereby his Majesty's forces appointed for pursuit and hunting of the said wolves, and thieves may be transported in to the Isle within the said Loch under the pain (tinsel) of loss of life, lands and goods.—Record of Council Acta.”

The difficulty of transporting all the boats from Loch Lomond must have been great. The route was probably from Inversnaid by Stronaclachadh and the end of Loch Arklet; and, as there could only be a rough drove road, the portage of the boats must have been effected with much labour.

“1611. Feb. 19. at Edinburgh. Charge against the Undertakers of the service against the ClanGregour.

“Forasmuch as Johnne Earl of Tullibardin, William Lord Murray his son, Harie Sancolme, Sir Duncane Campbell of Glenurquhy, Alexander Colhoun of Luss, Sir George Buquhannane of that Ilk James Campbell of Lundy and M^cfarlane of Arroquhar, compeiring personally before the Lords of Privy Council upon the last day of Jan. now bygone They undertook his Majesty's service against the ClanGregor and promised to go to the field and to have entered in action and blood, with them betwix the 13 day of this instant Feb. and to have prosecuted that service thereafter with their whole power and forces in manner specified in the acts made thereanent and although the said 13. day be now bygone Nevertheless there is no thing as yet done in that service but the same is altogether frustrated and the ClanGregor who were enclosed within an Isle an great hope had and promises made that they should not have got forth therof until the service had begun, against them in the Isle, are now escaped and got out and not so much as ane mynt or show of pursuit intended against them, but the undertakers, every one in their several discourses doing what in them lies, to vindicate themselves from all imputation of sloth, negligence, or neglect of duty in that point highly to his Majesty's offence and fostering of the lymmers in their rebellion and wicked deeds. Therefore letters to be directed charging the said undertakers to compeir before the said Lords upon the last day of Feb. instant To answer to the premisses and to give account to the said Lords of the form and manner of their proceeding in the said service and upon what occasion the same service is frustrated and disappointed under the pain of rebellion and putting of them to the horn with certification to them should they fail that Letters shall be directed simpliciter to put them thereto.—Record of Council.”

The following revolting entry refers evidently to the campaign of the previous autumn under Clan Ranald:—

“1611. Feb. Item by warrant and direction of his Highness Council to Allane M^cIldowie's servant who brought three heads of the MacGregors and presenting the same before the Council. As the same warrant produced upon compt bears £66, 13s. 4d.

“The which day Sir Duncane Campbell of Glenurquhy Knt. compeiring personally before the Lords of Secret Council he took upon him and promised to enter Gregor M^cGregor M^ceane and Duncane M^cincaid before the said Lords upon the 14. day of March next to come As he will answer the contrary at his peril.

“Anent the Commissioners against the ClanGregor.

“(The first part is almost an exact recapitulation of the former charge on Feb. 19. but continues.)

“And all the said persons compeiring personally and the excuses and defences propounded by them wherefore the said service took not effect being at length heard and considered by the Lords of Secret Council and they ripely advised therewith. The Lords of Secret Council find and declare that the persons particularly abovementioned and every one of them have failed in the execution of the charge, and service foresaid undertaken by them against the ClanGregour and that they have not fulfilled the same conform to their promises made thereanent and the said Lords Reserve the farther deliberation of what shall be enjoined unto them for their said failure to another occasion, ordaining them in the mean time, to address themselves home and to keep their own bounds so that the ClanGregor have no resett, protection, comfort nor maintenance within the same.—Record of Secret Council.”

The “Black Book of Taymouth” gives a fuller account of what took place on Loch Katerine:—

“The King his Maestie hering of the great rebelloun and oppressioun praxtisit be the Clangregour of new againe in anno 1610 sent from England the Erle of Dounbar for taking order with theme and for settling of peace in thee helandis as he hade done in the Southe borderis of befoir. And amangis otheris noble and gentle men the said Sir Duncane was burdenit to pursue the said Clangregour for ruitting out of their posteritie and name. Thairefter the Earle of Dounbar reterit himself back to the Kingis Maestie And in the month of Februar anno 1611. the Clangregour being straitlie pursued, they tuke thame selfis to the Ile callit Ilanvernak in Menteith. Quhairupon the Secret Consell employed the said Sir Duncane and otheris gentlemen in the countreis about, to besiege them Quhilk being begun, the seige wes haistelie dissolvit throch ane vehement storme of snow. The said Sir Duncane his folkis retering thairfra, Robert Campbell his second sone, hering of sum oppressioun done be a number of thame in the said Sir Duncane his landis, tuke thre of thair principallis, and in the taking ane wes slaine the other twa wer sent to Edinburgh. About this tyme the Erl of Dounbar departit this lyffe, upon the occasioun of whois deith the King his Maiestie chargit be severll commissions the Erle of Argyle and the said Sir Duncane and thair freindis to pursue the Clangregour. Quhairupon the Counsell appointed ane meeting to be in Edinburgh of all thair landlordis, quhair the said Sir Duncane being amangis the rest directit out of Edinburgh for attending on the countrie, his sone Robert and Johne Campbell sone to the Laird of Lawiris, quha slew the maist speciall man and proud lymmer of thame, callit Johne Dow M^cAllester¹ in Stronferna, and with him Allester M^cCorrie. Immediatlit thairefter, the said Sir Duncane abyding in Edinburgh with the rest of his sones and friendis, attending on the Secret Consell, the Clangregour burnt the hundreth markland of Glenurquhay, the twentie pund land of Glenfalloch, the tenlib : land of Mochaster in Monteith, the twentie pund land of Abirriquhill pertaining to Colene Campbell of Laweris brother, the eighteen marklandis of Cowldaris and Finnaves ; and in the Cosche of Glenurquhay they slew fourtie great mearis and thair followaris, with ane fair cursour sent to the said Duncane from the Prince out of Londoun. And fra that furth the Clangregour held thame self togidder to the number of VI. or VII. scoir men, till the said Sir Duncane eftir his returning from Edinburgh directit furth his sone Robert accompaneit with Colene Campbell of Abirruquhil to persue thame, quho followit thame straitlie throch Balquhiddel, Monteith, and Lennox, and drave thame to the forrest of Beinbuidh in Ergyle, quhair they slew Patrik M^cGregour sone to Duncane in Glen, and tuke Neill M^cGregour bastard to Gregor M^cEane, with otheris fyve, quhom they hangit at the Cosche quhair they slew the mearis, and from that chassit thame straitlie to the month that lysis betuix Rannoch and Badenoch, that from that tyme furth thay wer so scattered that thay newir mett agane abone the number off ten or tuelf. And from the month of Maii in the said zeir, the service wes followit furth be the said Erle of Ergyle and Sir Duncane and thair friendis, induring the quhilk tyme thrie wes tane and slane be the said Sir Duncane his sones and servandis to the number of sixtene of the said ClanGregour."

A tradition relates that one of the besiegers was lighting a fire on the shore, when Callum Oig M^cGregor V^cCoull shot him dead with a long barrel, and called out so as to be heard across the water "Thugadh thall a chrom na geredh"—"take care you dirty crook." As the Gaelic crom signifying crook literally is used for shoemaker, of which trade the defunct was, Callum was supposed by the daunted besiegers to be a Conjuror, against whom they could no longer carry on the war."

This tradition was reported by Donald MacGregor, a native of Strathfillan, schoolmaster in the parish of Luss, and learned in Gaelic tradition. He knew nothing when he told the story, of either the "Record of Council" or the "Book of Taymouth."

Some modern verses appear on the margin of the "Chartulary" relating to this tradition and to the epitaphs given to the Clan in the proclamations.

From the "Chartulary," referring to the siege of the MacGregors in Ilanvernoch, Feb. 1611.

"In fair Loch Ketrin's farther Isle
 Yclep'd by Council 'den and hole'
 The Wolves kept holiday awhile,
 Devouring what 'twas said they stole.
 To snare them here vast schemes were tried ;
 Each stratagem the horde defied,
 And hunters kept at bay.
 Some say a kindly fall of snow
 Bade these the hopeless sport forego,
 And give the brutes the play.
 But others that the Second Sight
 Had given them such a panic fright
 No longer tarry here they might,
 But ere tomorrow's peeping light,
 Should homeward hie away.

"1611. Feb. John Campbell brother to the Laird of Lawers, slew, this month, John Dhu M^cAllaster MacGregor of Stronferna for whose head as for those of several others, the Council had 31. Jan. offered £1000. It was not till the 24. May following that he forwarded his head to the Council. He claimed as reward not that above alluded to, but in terms of an act of council 19. April 1605. a 19 year lease of his lands, or compensation at sight of the Council. This tribunal after formally consulting his Majesty and being told (3. June)¹ that he left them to their direction in regard to the execution of laws which they themselves had framed and of the interpretation of which they were the best judges, ordered 19. Dec. 1611 the superior of the lands of Stronferna, viz. Robertson of Strowan, to pay Campbell a compensation, and that the wife, children, servants and tenants of the late John Dhu MacGregor of Stronferna be instantly ejected."²

“Item to the MacGregours that were kept in the tolbooth of Edinburgh every week the space of ten weeks before they were executed one dozen of bread at 16 shillings the dozen, £8.

NOTE.—The Glencoe prisoners were evidently in no way connected with the MacGregors, but only summoned in one assise for convenience. One of them was acquitted, and the two others returned to prison, as also one of the MacGregors, viz., Dougall M^cGregour Clerache M^cGregor. His trial is altogether curious. If he killed his young clansman intentionally, however guilty he might be morally and in the eyes of disinterested persons, yet he had done the Government a service thereby. Possibly they intended to recognise this, and therefore reprieved him, but there is no explanation of why they felt called upon to prosecute him, except the tender age of his victim, as from the point of view of the Council young Gregor was a “wolf.”¹ Another MacGregor, Donald M^cEandich, was taken back from the assise.

“1611. April. Item to George Matho messenger passing from Edinburgh with letters to charge Sir Duncane Campbell of Glenurquhy to bring and exhibit before the Council Gregor M^cEane upon the 10. day of May next to come to the effect he

"1611. April 29. Commission to the Earl of Argyle to pass upon the Clan-Gregour.

"James & a Forasmuch as the open and avowed rebellion of that barbarous race of the name of M^cGregor is grown to so great a height as shaking off all fear of God and reverence of us and our authoritie thay become every day more insolent for remeid whereof and by their exemplary punishment to imprint fear in the hearts of all others our evil disposed subjects we have given power and commission to Archd: Erll of Eryll and James Campbell of Laweris.

"Commission to the Earl of Eryll against the ClanGregour James & a Forasmuch as ever since we were of perfect years and able in our own person to govern the kingdoms committed by God to our charge and government. Our chief care (next our duty to his Holy Majesty) hath been to maintain justice and govern the same in peace, and quietness, and rather by lenity than using the rigour of our authority To draw all our subjects to live in a peaceable form under the government of a just Prince. Ever preferring mercy and pardon where the same was humbly suited of us (upon assurance given by the suitors of their conformity to our laws and living as peaceable subjects in time thereafter) to the rigour of our laws, and not using the last remeid where the first was not suited in time convenient, As by example of the middle shyres of our kingdom and farthest remote parts of our Isles is evidently known, the inhabitants thereof now live in as great security without oppression or trouble as our subjects of any other parts of our kingdoms do to their unspeakable comfort ; yet notwithstanding of all these premises that most unhappy and barbarous race of the name of M^cGregor having shaken off all fear of God and reverence to us and our authority have not only neglected that good occasion, in suiting and obtaining of our pardon for their bygane misbehaviour but as if there were not a God to punish them nor a Sovereign Prince to put his decree in execution And, as if they only, of all our subjects were able to make good against us and withstand our authority ; they still persist in their most barbarous and wicked life to the great harm and impoverishing of many honest men for remeid whereof and to give example to all others our subjects to continue in our obedience and not to presume upon the impunity of the said M^cGregors to lead the like wicked life as they do, We are resolved to lay mercy aside and by justice and the sword to root and extirpate all of that race, their assisters, and partakers that shall be found rebellious and disobedient to us and our authority And that this our determination may be put in full execution we have made special choice of the Earl of Argyle."

Next follows an iniquitous proclamation, which must leave an indelible blot on its authors.

"1611. April 29. Licence and commission to the Earl to heir the offers of the ClanGregour.

"For mitigating of the rigour of our other commission given to our said cousing

We licence and permit him to hear the offers of such of the said MacGregors as shall submit themselves in our mercy and to receive them to our obedience upon the conditions following viz that he shall humbly sute our pardon, shall before obtaining thereof enter in action and blood against any of that race and name being our declared rebels, hunt, follow and pursue them with fire and sword and never leave off the pursuit of some of them till they be reduced to our obedience or rooted out of our kingdom, and that he shall likewise either deliver to our said cousing or to the Lords of our privy Council the person or head of a M^cGregor of as good rank, quality and action as himsel and find caution.—Record of Council.—Commissions.

“1611. April 29. Proclamation to the Laird of Glenurquhy and such as shall be employed by him for the taking of ClanGregour, narrating the former commission to Erle of Argyle.

“For better effectuating of which service we have appointed Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhy Knight to attend upon and assist our said cousin ‘Attoure we have taken the said Sir Duncane Campbell and all such persons as shall assist him under our special protection, defence, supply, maintenance, and safeguard to be uncalled, troubled, or pursued criminally nor civilly.’”

In May of this year Glenurquhy burned the houses and lands of Dewletter and the Castle of Glenstray, as appears from a pardon for these acts granted in 1621 and 1627.

“1611. May 24. The head of John Dhu M^cAllaster M^cGregour of Stronferna was sent to the Council by John Campbell brother of Lawers.¹

“1611. May 24. at Edinburgh. Certain Acts concerning the ClanGregor.

“Forasmuch as the King’s Majesty having made and constituted Archibald Earl of Argyle his Majesty’s Lieutenant Justice and commissiones for the pursuit of the rebellious thieves and Lymmers called the ClanGregour And his Majesty and Lords of Secret Council being willing to assist the said Lieutenant in everything which may further and advance the service, and considering that in the prosecution thereof he will oftimes have occasion to have sundry companies of men upon the fields who must have their entertainment, and victuals in the countries where they shall happen to encamp, therefore his Majesty and the Lords of Secret Council allow that the said Lieutenant and the Captains and commanders of his camp and Host shall take vivers for themselves and their companies in the parts and countries where they shall encamp, upon the prices following viz the mairt for twenty merks, the boll of meal, for four pounds, the sheep or wedder for two merks, the stone of cheese for 24 shillings and ordain them to make present payment of the prices foresaid when they take up the said vivers and that they take no more at one time, than may serve them for meat allanerlie for the space of 48 hours and that they take not their hiall vivers and furnishing from one man but proportionally from all the neighbours of the bounds and parts where they shall camp in, and according to the necessity of the service and state of the country and bounds where they shall encamp. The Lords ordain that the reseters of the ClanGregour, their wives and bairns shall be called before his Majesty's council for their resetts since the proclamation in the month of — last and their trial to be according to the form and order of the Council.

“The Lords remit the order taking with the wives and children of the ClanGregour to the Lieutenant himself— The Lords of Secret Council ordain letters to be directed charging the Sherrif of the Shires where the wives and children of the ClanGregour have their residence as also their landlords to render and deliver them to the Lieutenant within three days under the pain of horning and they being delivered to the Lieutenant ordain him to transport them to such parts as he shall think meet and to mark the wives with a key upon the face and if they shall withdraw themselves from the places whereunto they shall be transported the Lords ordain the reseters of them to be called before the Council.

“Forasmuch as one of the chief causes which has encouraged the rebellious thieves and lymmers of the ClanGregour to continue in their thievish doings has been the comfort and supply which they have found in sundry parts of the incountry from which they are well provided and furnished with poulder, bullet, and armour and whereas they dare not come themselves to buy armour the same is bought to their use by other Highlandmen, to the great hindrance of his Majesty's service Therefore the Lords of Secret Council ordain letters to be directed To command charge and inhibit all and sundry his Majesty's lieges and subjects within the burrows of Perth, Stirling, Glasgow, Dumbarton and Inverness by open proclamation at the Market Crosses of the said burrows that none of them presume nor take upon hand to sell any kind of armour to any highlandmen but by the knowledge and advice of such special persons, within every one of the said burrows, as shall be appointit to that effect by his Majesty's Lieutenant, to the effect it may be clearly known and understood that the said armour is not to the use nor behoof of the said ClanGregour. As they will answer upon the contrary at their highest peril.

“The Lords of Secret Council for the better furtherance of his Majesty's service against the ClanGregour give power and commission to Archibald Earl of Eryll his Majesty's Lieutenant, Justice, and Commissioner against the ClanGregour to charge such persons within the Sherifffdom of Perth whom in his honour and conscience he shall think to be favourers, reseters, or assisters of the ClanGregor to transport themselves to the Sherifffdoms of Fife, Stirling or Forfar and to remain there for the space of two months.

“The Lords ordain a missive to be written to Sir Johnne Moncreiffe to cause the house of Garthe be delivered to the Lieutenant. The Lords ordain Sir Duncane Campbell of Glenurquhy Knight who was personally present to deliver Allaster M'Gorrie presently being in his hands, to the Lieutenant.

“Forasmuch as for the better furtherance and execution of his Majesty’s service against the ClanGregour it is very necessary that the houses of Innerdouglass pertaining to —— M^cFarlane of —— and the house of Fatlipps pertaining to Malcome M^cFarlane of —— be delivered to his Majesty’s Lieutenant to be kept by him for such space as he shall have that service in hands; therefore ordain letters to be directed charging the said —— M^cFarlane and all others, havears, keepers, and detainers of the said place and house of Innerdouglass and the said Malcolme M^cFarlane and all others, havears, keepers, and detainers of the said place and house of Fatlipps, to render and deliver the said place and house to the said Lieutenant or any in his name having his power to receive the same, and to remove themselves and their servants forth thereof within six hours next after the Charge under the pain of rebellion &a And if they fail &a to denounue. &a.

“Forasmuch as the King’s Majesty having now resolved upon some good and substantial order and course for pursuit of the rebellious thieves and lymmers of the ClanGregor and reducing of them to his Majesty’s obedience, and the forces destined for this service being now to enter to work, and to prosecute, hunt, and follow and pursue the said lymmers with fire and sword and all other extremity It is therefore very necessary and expedient that all his Majesty’s good subjects in the countries and bounds next adjacent to the ClanGregor be upon their guard as well for keeping of their own bounds free of them, as to follow and pursue them as they come there; For which purpose ordain letters to be directed to command and charge the Sheriffs, Stewards and Baillies and all noblemen, barons and gentlemen and others his Majesty’s subjects in the bounds and parts where the said thieves and lymmers shall happen to resort and repair To cause diligent attendance to be given that they have no resset, comfort, protection nor maintenance, within their bounds, and if they shall happen to come there for eschewing of apprehension That they immediately rise in arms follow and pursue the said thieves and lymmers, raise the hue and cry and never leave off the pursuit of them until they be off their bounds and countries. As they will answer upon the contrary at their highest peril.

“1611. May 25. The Lords of Secret Council ordain and command Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhy Knight, James Campbell of Lawers, Allane Cameroune of Lochyell, and Alexander M^cDonald of Gargavache to deliver unto Archibald Earl of Ergyll his Majesty’s Lieutenant in his Highness’s service against the ClanGregour all such persons of the said Clan as they have already taken prisoners or shall hereafter take prisoners during the time of the said service For the which these presents or the extract thereof subscribed by the Clerk of his Majesty’s Privy Council shall be unto them a sufficient warrant.—Record of Secret Council, Acta.

“May 25. The Council had already been taking measures to levy money from such landlords as had ‘MacGregors dwelling within their bounds, or whose grounds were laid waste by them, in return for their efforts to extirpate them which the Government seem to have more at heart than the Landlords.' On 25. these landlords being convened as now asserted by the Council, before the commissioners of the Highlands had promised to give his Majesty £60 for every merk land the second year after his Majesty should have rid them of the oppression of Clan-Gregour. From a subsequent minute of Council however (July 1613.) it appears that the number of landlords present, out of at least sixteen of the best rank and quality of these was five only and that of these Glenurquhy as one, protested against the transaction. The reluctance indeed of the landlords to go along with this measure will be illustrated in the sequel."

Of the Landlords of the ClanGregor at this time the subjoined list is made from a comparison of the "Record of Council," and the Treasurer's Books (July 1613).

"Earls of Argyll, Murray, Linlithgow, Monteith, Master of Tullibardin, Lord of Madertie, Sir George Buchanan of that ilk, Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhy, Sir Archibald Stirling of Keir, John Napier of Merchiston, James Reidheuch of Cultebraggane, Alexander Menzies of Weyme, Robert Robertson of Strowane, Duncan Campbell of Glenlyon, James Campbell of Lawers, John Campbell his brother, Mr James Shaw of Knockhill, Alex. Shaw of Cambusmoir, Thomas Graham of Boquhapple, Duncan Menzies.

“1611. June 5. at Greenwich.

“From his Majesty anent the ClanGregour.

“‘Right Trusty and well beloved Cousins and counsellors we greet you well. Wheras we find that upon the slaughter of John Dow M^cAllaster some suit is made for payment of that price imposed by our Council at Stirling, upon every head of the ClanGregour but particularly of a greater rate of money upon some specials of mark and note among them, of which this John Dow M^cAllaster was one, we have therein thought meet to refer the interpretation of your own act wholly unto yourselves who first made the same, and as no doubt you can best deliver what was the true meaning and intent at the time of the making thereof, so we wish that you should accordingly proceed and accomplish the condition of it unto whomsoever you shall hold the same to be justly due, and in like sort should give unto every one who shall make an unlawful demand their dispatch and a direct refuse, so far as in reason they cannot justly challenge any thing which you, who were makers of the act can best determine. And so we bid you fairwell. From our Court at Greenwich the 3. of June 1611.’—Record of Council.—Royal Letters.

“August 5. At Salisbury. From his Majesty anent M^cConnell duy and M^cRannald.

“‘Right trusty Cousin and Counsellor and right trusty and well beloved Councillors we greet you heartily well. we wrote unto you before to have caused the receivers of our rents of that our kingdom deliver to Allane M^cConwildwy or the bearer hereof the Laird of M^cRannald so much money as should amount to one month’s pay for fourscore men, and that for prosecuting our service against the ClanGregour and understanding by the bearer that this money was never as yet suited by you and that the sum will amount (at 10 shillings a day for every man) to one hundred pounds sterling our will and pleasure is, that as soon as you shall receive advertisement from the Earl of Ergyll that the said Allane and the Bearer with their forces are gone to the fields and entered in our service against the ClanGregour you shall immediately thereafter cause the officers of receipt in that our kingdom pay unto the bearer for himself, and his neighbour Allane, the said one hundred Pounds sterling for which these presents shall be your sufficient warrant. And so we bid you heartily farewell. From our Court at Salisbury the 3. of August 1611. Sic subscribitur, “August 16. Complaint by (Sir Alexander) Menzies of Weyme, as follows. The Lords of Secret Council have at the instance of William Rattray of Rynagullane, Johnne Tailyeour in Corb, and Johnne Beg there, decerned horning against complainer for not entering before the Council Allaster Menzies in Apnadow, rebel as being his man. Now Archibald Earl of Argyle, having been employed by his Highness in the pursuit of the ClanGregour, and having 'the hail cuntrey people of the Hielandis undir his chairge in that present service' compliner and all his men are and must continue during that service on the fields under the said Earl so that he cannot without great prejudice to that service compeir to the effect forsaid. Farther by an act of Council it is ordained that during the time of that service the persons engaged therein shall be free from all compearing before any judicatory of this kingdom. If the complainer had not been burdened with this service he would have willingly compeared and shown why he should not be urged with the entry of the said Allaster in respect that the said Allaster is not his man but is servant to the Earl of Argyll and at present with the Earl in the fields against the ClanGregour. Still complainer has fund caution in 1000 merks to enter the said Allaster if it is found that he ought to do so. On these grounds the said horning ought to be suspended. The Lords do suspend the letters of horning, because the said Allaster is in his Majesty's service against the ClanGregour. as has been verified by a letter sent to the complainer from the Earl of Argyle.—Dr Masson.

"1611. Sep. Complaint by Ronnald M^cDonald, apparent of Gargavach as follows. Complainer and Allaster M^cRonnald of Gargavach, his Father and Allane Camroun of Lochyell having been called to his Majesty's service against the ClanGregour had 'for testificatioun of thar willing obedience, to the hazard of thair lyveis and qubat ellis thay haif,' undertaken the service with the resolution to prosecute it to the uttermost of theair possibilities 'Accordingly Camroun and the complainer having sent out some spies against the ClanGregour had learned that Robert Abroche and 22 principal ringleaders of the Clan were in Badyenoch and had the protection there of the whole Clan Chattane and Clan Fersane, Thereupon complainer with his friends repaired in all haste to Badyenoch on 22 of July last 'to have maid ane onset upone the ClanGregour.' The Clan Chattane and Clan Fersane however hearing of their arrival at the head of Badyenoch rose all in arms to the number of 300 men, under the charge of William M^cIntosche son of the late Laird M^cIntosche & a and came to the place where the complainer and his company were and not only stayed them from going farther into the country for pursuit of the ClanGregour but demanded of them how they dared come there against the ClanGregour who were friends of theirs and whom they would protect against all deadly, without respect of his Majesty. Although complainer had then 'objectit unto thame' the directioun he had from his Majesty and the Council for pursuit of the ClanGregour defenders took 12 of his men and these they yet detain prisoners. They would not have failed to slay complainer himself if night had not come on permitting his escape. Charge had been given to certain M^cFersanes and M^cIntosches (enumerated) to answer this day under pain of rebellion and now the defenders appearing the Lords find the complaint proven against three who are to be committed to ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh.—Dr Masson.”

In reference to the part taken by Locheil and Clan Ranald in pursuit of the MacGregors, a passage in Gregory's "Highlands and Isles" has an incidental remark as follows:—In 1611

“The Clanchameron and the Clanranald of Lochaber under their respective Chiefs Allan Cameron of Lochiel and Alexander M^cRanald of Keppoch, instead of waging war with each other or with the captain of the Clanchattan, were employed to assist the Earl of Argyle in suppressing of the ClanGregor. Several gentlemen of the families of Locheil and Keppoch refused however to engage on this service; which indeed if carried into effect with good will by the Highland Clans employed would have speedily ended in the utter ruin of the name of MacGregor.”¹

1611. Sep. Robert Abroch had his headquarters near the Laird of Grant's house of Ballachastel.

From the “Chartulary” :—

“1611. Nov. 19. at Edinburgh. Anent the ClanGregour.

“The which day the missive letter and articles respectively underwritten sent from his Majesty were presented to the Lords of Secret Council and in open audience read of the tenour follows.

“‘Right trusty and well beloved cousin and Counsellor we greet you well, we send you now home the Earl of Argyle to make en end according to his promise of that service, which he has already begun. The specialities whereof we have caused to be set down in articles which we have thought good herewith to send unto you, As for the service itself We are thus resolved, that as the connivance at those and the like malefactors might justly be accounted a great iniquity, so the utter extirpation of them and all and every one in particular, would be a work too troublesome, And therefore we have thought good on some to execute justice, and the rest to take to mercy And as we will not have our justice satisfied with the meanest and basest persons, so we would have special choice made of the most notorious malefactors to be an example thereof in this present business for which effect we would have you crave the advice as well of the said Earl of Argyle as of the gentlemen and others next inhabiting unto them, and who have been most endamaged by them by whose information ye may likewise learn what particular persons are most fit to be taken to mercy and which not. As concerning all satisfaction to be made to the persons particularly interested by such as shall be taken to mercy, as it will be a matter altogether impossible, so we must in that point prefer the general benefit of the quietness of the whole country to the private interest of any one man, or some few others damnified, yet will we that those who are any way able to make any satisfaction shall according to their power make present restitution and for the rest let their good behaviour in time coming be accepted in part of payment, for if we should go about to exact the extremity both would the performance of that service require longer time and be more troublesome to the said Earl and also be more chargeable to us in recompensing the same, yet do we not mean to set you down an absolute rule herein upon either side, but leave it to your discretion so to temper this business as all occasions of complaint for non restitution may be taken away, so far as may be and yet no impossibility to be thrust upon the offender which may hinder the conclusion of so good a work, But to the intent that an assured peace (and not as it were a truce be obtained, for putting over of an imminent storm) may ensue, one point is carefully to be considered and diligently executed which is, the transplanting of such as shall be taken to mercy and of the wives and children of those who are or shall be killed or executed, (for except they be transplanted out of those places wherein they have had their continual residence according as was done unto the Grahams of Eske we see not how any perfect quietness of the country may be expected.) which point, how it may be best performed ye are likewise to consult with their aforesaid neighbours whose opinions being heard ye are to give such order therein as ye and they shall think most fit and most easy to be followed And all these premises recommending to your special consideration We bid you farewell from our Court at Roystoun.

'the 23 day of October 1611.'

"1611. Nov. Some particuler headis of his Majesteis will and pleasour concerning the ordour takeing with the M^cGregouris.

"First that my Lord of Argyle give in a roll to the Counsall of all the M^cGregouris that are killed by him or his, of those that ar takin and in presone and of those that ar come in will, and of those that ar yitt rebellis and lyis out and that my lord leave the copy of this roll with my Lord Fentoun.

"His Majesty is pleasit of that number of the M^cGregouris whiche come in will to grant unto my Lord of Argyle some three or four of thair lyves and a remissioun : off the whiche number Duncane Makewin alias Duncane the Tutour to be one, in regard that he wes chief of thame and breker of the societie : providing alwise that thay find sufficient caution and suretie to the Counsell for observing of the laweris in tyme to come, and that these suretyis be ansuerable for ony wrong thay do hereftir.

"For the rest of these that ar come in will, if ony of thame haif killed a M^cGregour als good as himself (or) two thrie or four of thame which in comparisone may be equal unto him, and assuredlie knowne to be his deid, his Majestie is pleasit he haif a remissioun, with the uther thrie or four whiche his Majestie hes grantit to the Erll of Argyll ; providing lykwise that thay find sufficient surety for keeping good ordour in tyme comeing and such suryteis as sall content the Counsell. And for such as ar come in will and done no service by killing of the M^cGregouris nor cannot find sufficient suretie that then the law to haif his dew course, and no favour at all to be shown.

“For suche as ar yitt rebelsis and outlawis after the Counsell he considered of the roll presentit unto thame by my Lord Argyle that ther be no pardoun grantit unto any nor takin in will except he present a better head at least ane as goode als his awne or such two thrie or more as salbe enjoyned to him by the Counsall. And for Robert Abroche who is now Chief of thame that ar presently out that he be not pardoned unless he bring at least halff a dusone of thair headis.

“To such of the M^cGregouris that ar pardoned and hes goodis and geir sufficient to mak restitutioun to the poorest sorte and that to be done at the sight and discretion of the Counsall to those that hes most neid of it and whair thair is no guidis nor geir thair is none to be haid.

“For the young children and wyffis that thair be proclamatioun maid to produce theme or utherwise the resetaris to be guyltie of the crymes committed be the childrenes parentis and that the Counsal 1611 Nov. be informatioun of my Lord of Argyle and utheris of the cuntrey people learne to know of thame all, and thairefter to dispose of thame so as they sall think best for repressing such a generatioun that thay never come to such a head or insolence again.—Dr Masson.

“His Majesty ordains that the Council take trial of the resetters and so many of them as shall be found guilty by the means and information of Mylord of Argyle shall be fined accordingly which fine his Majesty is pleased to bestow upon MyLord of Argyle to enable him the better to serve his Majesty.

“That they shall be answerable and obedient subjects to our Sovereign and his laws That they shall satisfy and redress all parties who shall sustain harm or skaith of them hereafter and for bygane wrongs that they shall make redress so far as they have geir, That they shall not assist nor take part with the ClanGregor, resett them, their wives, bairns nor goods nor keep conventions, trysts nor meetings with them, by word nor write ‘That they shall remain and keep ward within the Sherrifdom of Fife or any other part besouth the waters of Forth and shall not resort, nor repair, benorth the said water, and last that they shall compeir personally before his Majesty's Council so oft as they or their cautioners shall be charged to that effect. upon ten days warning under such pecunial sums as shall be modified by his Majesty's Council to be paid to his Majesty, in case they fail in any part of the premisses besides the satisfaction and redress of the parties skaithed.—Record of Secret Council.

“ 1611. Nov. 21. Commission for trying the Resetters of the ClanGregour.

“ Forasmuch as albeit the resett of the rebellious thieves and lymmers of the ClanGregour, their wives, bairns, goods and geir has been prohibited and discharged by many good acts and proclamations made, and published heretofore ; nevertheless the chief and principal cause which has procured and still procures their continuance in rebellion and which has frustrated and disappointed the effectual execution of his Majesty’s service against them doth proceed from the resett, supply, protection, and maintenance which they find among great numbers of people as well inhabiting the countries and bounds next adjacent unto them as in some parts of the country, who in outward show and appearance falsely pretending to be unfriends to the said limmers do notwithstanding covertly and obscurely not only supply all their necessities and wants but resett them in their houses, and take their goods and geir in keeping to their own use, and behoof, so that at all times when these fugitive limmers and thieves are pursued, or an course intended against them for reducing of them to obedience, their resetts and starting holes are so sure and certain unto them, as the most part of the courses intended against them have proven fruitless, highly to the offence and contempt of his Majesty and fostering of the said thieves in their insolencies ; and whereas bypast experience in the like case gives clear evidence that nothing is more forcible against traitors, rebels, and fugitives than to cut them short of their resetts, and starting holes, cannot be goodly done, but by exemplary punishment to be inflicted upon the Resetters, Thairfore, &c.”

Thus in the autumn of the year when such comprehensive plans were laid for the utter extirpation of the race, the King and Council confess that their efforts were mostly fruitless, and this circumstance explains the comparative clemency of the first part of the proclamation of the 19th November with the object of sparing the Commissioner further trouble, and the authorities greater expense.

"1611. Edinburgh Dec. 6. Complaint by Johnne Campbell brother of James Campbell of Lawers as follows.

"The Lords of the Secret Council having upon 19. April 1605. resolved that the 'work of the exterminatioun of that wicked and unhappie and infamous race of lawless lymmaris, callit the Macgregour should be followed out against them till they had been 'alluterlie extirpat and rooted out' had declared 'verie solemnelie' by an Act of Council that whoever should apprehend and enter before them any of the name of M^cGregor 'quick or dead' should receive a nineteen years tack of all such lands as belonged to the person presented or were possessed by them, or else 'ane contentatioun and satisfaction for thair kyndnes to be payit be the landis-lord at the arbitriement of the Counsale' provided that the person receiving the tack should find caution to answer to the laws and to pay the old mail to the landlord, and also that at the expiry of the said tack the tacksman should vacate the said lands to the landlord and claim no kidness to the same thereafter. Now the complainer to the great hazard of his life had 'maid ane onset on the late Johnne Dow M^cAllaster M^cGregour in Stronfarnoch a chief ringleader of that Clan, slain him and presented his head accordingly but albeit the said Johnne was kindly tenant of the lands of Stronfarnoch, held by him of Robert Robertsoun of Strowane at the time of his slaughter, and albeit the said Robert, according to the said Act ought to deliver to the complainer a nineteen years tack of the said lands, yet he 'proudlie refuses' to do so. Both parties agreed to submit this matter to the Arbitration of Archibald Earl of Argyle and Sir Alexander Hay secretary to his Majesty, who promised to give their judgement by the 20. instant.

"1611. Dec. 19. The matter in dispute having been submitted to the appointed arbiters with Alexander Earl of Dunfermlyne as oversman they had awarded to Campbell a certain sum in silver to be paid by Robertsoun in full discharge of his claim. As in these circumstances it is reasonable that the Laird of Strowane be possessed with his said lands, and that the relict and bairns of the said Johnne Dow be removed therefrom 'as personis unworthie to brook ony benefit within his Majesteis kingdome' the Lords declare that it shall be lawful to enter in possession of the said lands without any process of law, and to remove the said widow and her goods furth thereof without incurring any action of ejection, intrusion, spuilie or wrongous intromission.—Dr Masson.

Proclamations, Commissions, &c.

FROM the "Chartulary":—

"1612. Jan. 9. Letters direct to denounce the Erle of Tullibardin and some M^cGregours.

"Same date. At Edinburgh. Act against certain M^cGregours.

"Anent our Sovereign Lord's Letters direct, making mention for so much as Allane M^cEanduy of Lochaber upon promise and condition made by him for Duncane, Patrik and Gregor M^cGregours sons to Patrik Aldoche, Dowgall M^cCoull oig in Glenbatha, John M^cEane M^cGregour and John Dow M^cPhatrik vy, that they should do some notable service to his Majesty meriting his Majesty's gracious favour he procured a protection unto them assuring them to be untroubled or pursued by those who were employed in commission against the ClanGregour and containing some other favour and condition unto them Likeas he promised to be answerable for them in the meantime and seeing there are some courses now in hand for settling of the ClanGregour and reducing of them to obedience, Necessary it is, that the said persons give likewise their obedience whereby others by their example may be moved to do the like, And anent the Charge geiven &a which being called and the said &a not compeiring, the Lords of Secret Council have declared and by the tenour hereof declare all and whatsomever protection, favour, condition, and promise made to the said persons to be null and of none avail in time coming. And ordain the same persons to be reputed, held, and esteemed as rebels, traitors and fugitives from his Majesty's Laws and accordingly to be pursued with fire and sword with all rigour and extremity Like as also the said Lords ordain letters to be directed to the officers of arms charging them to pass and denounce the said Duncane, Patrik, and Gregor M^cGregouris sons to the said Aldoche, Dougall M^cCoull oig in Glenbotha, John M^cEan M^cGregour, and John Dow M^cPhatrik vy, his Majesty's rebels and put them to his Majesty's horn and to escheat and inbring all their moveable goods to his Majesty's use for their contempton.

"Jan. 10. A latin Remission to the M^cEan duys for various crimes in recognition of their service against the ClanGregour.

"January. Commissioners of Council had this month met at Doune in Menteith and passed several acts for fining the reseters of the ClanGregor. Two Reseters viz Gilbert Graham in Glaschoil and Walter M^cLauchlan in Blarvoyach had produced Graham of Duchray and Graham younger of Duchray sureties for payment of their fines.

"Feb. 4. The Earl of Argyle judging it reasonable that the above sureties should be relieved issued an order on the principals.—Precept of Poynding, The Earle of Argyle against Gilbert Graham and Walter M^cLauchlane. Original in Gartmore Collection.

"Feb. 12. Alexander Livingstoun of Westquarter became cautioner for 'Duncane and Allaster Livingstounes, sons to umqle Patrik Aldoch MacGregor.'

"1612. Feb. "1612. Alexander Stewart of Laggarie is debtor in the testament of Agnes M^cKean.—Commissary Books of Glasgow. That Alexander Stewart was properly Alexander MacGregor there can be little doubt. Alexander MacGregor had been infest in Laggarie on a precept of Clare Constat as heir to his father John MacGregor in 1602.—Record of the Burgh of Dumbarton 1602, as cited under that year. He had, of course, taken the protective name of Stewart under the operation of the Act of Secret Council April 3. 1603, abolishing the surname of MacGregor.—See 10th Dec. 1603, where mention of him under both surnames.

"1612. Feb. 25. Although Allan Cameron of Lochyell and Allaster M^cDonald of Gargavach who have been employed by his Majesty against the ClanGregour & a hed expected that their kin and friends would have joined them with their forces for prosecuting that service yet . . . certain of the Camerons and two M^cDonalds enumerated, said persones having been formerly assissters of the said Allan and Allaster in all their private affairs 'but now being offendit with thame becaus thay have randerit their obedience to his Majestie and tane upoun thame the executioun of some of his Majestie's directionis aganis the Clangregour and some uther brokin men of the Heylandis' and being 'loath that ony suche course sould tak effect in thair personis, bot that rather the saidis Allane and Allaster M^cDonald sould have followit the wickit and unhappie trade of the rebellious Lymmaris of the Heylandis and Illis that thairby thay might have been the more able undir thair patrocinie and protection to have continewit thair iniquitie and wickedness fra the quhilk they feir now to be reclaimed be thame' have not only refused to assist the said commissioners in his Majesty's service but avowedly oppose them, declaring themselves to be friends of the ClanGregour and of all broken men so that the execution of the said service is frustrated. Charge had been given to the said defenders to answer and none of them now appearing they are all of them to be denounced rebels.

"1612. March. At this time a skirmish took place between the Earl of Perth at the Head of a considerable force composed partly of MacGregors who had taken the name of Drummond and a body of MacGregors at Tomzarloch, the latter having occupied some houses were dislodged by means of fire applied, when five were captured and six killed. The killed were John Dow MacGregor, Donald Gramich MacGregor V^cCulchere, John M^cPhatrik Nadidin MacGregor V^cCulchere, Gregor M^cEan V^cEan MacGregor Elensisens (Gillespie?) MacGregor. The Earl's force is thus specified in a pardon issued to them early in 1614, as appears from Mag. Sig. quoted at the proper date.

"John Earl of Perth (2. Earl) John Master of Madertie James Drummond his brother Sir Alexander Drummond of Carnock Knight, Alexander brother of Mr William Drummond of Hawthornden, James Drummond of Millness, David Drummond chamberlain of Drymen, Thomas Drummond of Drummohence, × John Drummond of Innerzeldie, × James Drummond his brother, × Duncan Drummond late of Kincart beg, × Duncan Drummond in Pitluir, × Duncan Drummond in Wester Dundorne, James Drummond officer, Patrick Drummond in Dalmarklawis,* John Drummond in Auchinskelloch,* Duncan Drummond in Mawia, James Drummond in Balliclone, Patrick Drummond in Williamsoune, × John Drummond in Wester Dundorne, Alexander Stewart in Port, Alexander Reidheugh,* David Malloch, John Drummond of Drummondearnoch, Patrick Drummond forester of Glenartney,* John M^cCoruther, James Drummond of Pitzalloun,* Malcolm M^cAndrew in Dundorn, James Stewart late in Torry,* James Menzies in Mewis William M^cNiven in Glen Artnay,* John M^cCoruther in Blairtown, James Dow in Glenkishon.

Mr MacGregor has marked with a cross those who he considers were MacGregors, adding that more might have been, and several others, who seem probable, are now marked with a star.

"Jan. 14. Letter Sir Thomas Hamilton of Byres to the King.²

"The counsaill ressavd your Majesties letter concerning Robin Abroches remissioun and protection which upon hope of your Majesties gracious permission they have delayed to performe, till be thair direction to me; your Majestie may be informed be my letter, that Robin Abroch is reported to have beine the most bluidie, and violent murthourar and oppressour of all that damned race and maist terrible to all the honest men of the cuntrie who now ressaving favour above all utheris of his kin, being dispensed from compeirance before the Counsaill, to mensweare his name, and from finding caution for his compeirance before the Counsaill, whanever he salbe chaired under competent paynes, which hes beine the ordour prescryved to all the rest of that Clan without exception. The favour grantit to him gevis him louse renzeis, discourages these who stand in feir of his barborous oppression, and may move other brokin men to stand out till they get the lyk conditions, and perhaps tempt some who stand alreddie bound to the peace, to lope furth whill thay ohteane the lyke freedom, and immunitie, from all ordour, and obedience. And thairfore the Counsaill most humble craives your Majestie may allow thame to urge Robin Abroch to observe the common ordour prescryved to all utheris of his Clan, and obeyed inviolable be such as obtaned

"1613. Jan 21. Proclamation in favour of Robert Abroche.

"James &c. To all and sundry. 'Forasmuch as Robert Abroche M^cGregour being moved with a hatred and detestation of the wicked and unhappy trade of life, of the rebellious thieves and limmers called the ClanGregour, and being most desirous to become our lawful subject, and to live hereafter in the rank and condition of a humble and obedient subject, he has for this effect, not only entered in action against the said limmers and brought in some of the specials of them who have worthily suffered death, but with that he has come in to our court, and offered to employ his person in whatsoever our services, as well against the ClanGregour as others.'

"Received into favour on finding caution and taken under special protection, defence, supply, maintenance and safeguard. 21 Jan. 1613.

"Jan. 26. Proclamation that none of the ClanGregour wear armour.

"'Forasmuch as some of the ClanGregour who are guilty of that detestable, barbarous, and cruel butcherie, and slaughter committed upon our Sovereign Lord's peaceable and good subjects at Glenfrune and of the fire raisings, herships, and depredations committed since upon Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurquhy, Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, and Coline Campbell of Aberurquhill, taking new breath and courage unto them, upon a foolish conceit and apprehension conceived by them that the courses intended, and in hands for reducing of that Clan to obedience were become void and frustrated They have begun to flock together in companies armed with swords, targes, bows, darlochs, harquebuts, pistoletts and other weapons invasive, and they go athwart the country sorning, oppressing, quarrelling, and injuring his Majesty's good subjects, in all parts where they may be masters, and commanders and their pride and insolency is come to this height, that they are become careless, of whatsoever courses are undertaken for reducing of them to obedience, so that if some strict order be not taken with them whereby they may be retained, and held under obedience and fear of the law, the estate and condition of his Majesty's subjects dwelling ewest unto them will become as hard and worse nor at any time heretofore. Therefore the King's Majesty with advice of the Lords of the secret Council has statuted and ordained That no person or persons whatsoever of the ClanGregour who are guilty of the cruel and detestable crime foresaid committed at Glenfroone, and of the fireraisings, murders, slaughters, herschips, and depredations committed since upon the said Sir Duncane Campbell of Glenurquhy, Alexander Colquhoun of Luss, And Coline Campbell of Aberurquhill, shall at any time after the publication hereof, bear or wear any kind of armour except ane pointless knife, to cut their meat, under the pain of death, to be executed upon the person, or persons whatsoever, who shall violate and contravene this present act, and ordinance, and ordain letters to be directed to make publication hereof &a by open proclamation at the market crosses of Perth, Stirling, Dumbarton Inverness and other places needful, in order that none pretend ignorance of the same and to command and charge all Sheriffs, Stewards, Justices of the Peace, Provosts and Baillies within burgh, and other judges, magistrates and officers whatsoever to take and apprehend all such persons of the ClanGregour who are guilty of the crimes abovewritten whom they shall find to bear or wear any kind of armour except a pointless knife, as said is, and to bring, present and exhibit to his Majesty's justice, to the effect the said punishment of death may be executed upon them as the said Sherrifs &a will answer upon their obedience.—Record of Secret Council.'

"1613. Feb. 2. Letter Campbell of Glenurchy to the King.

"Please your excellent Majesty Your Highness's letters in favour of Robert Abroche MacGregour now calling himself Ramsay I have received. Whereby I am willing to repossess him in whatsoever lands he hath right unto without trouble or plea in law. It is of truth that he did possess certain lands belonging to me without any right or title to them at all yea so far against my consent, that with remembrance of my very great loss I shall repent I had such a tenant. And when he, as one of the chief and special ringleaders of his viporous clan, did not content themselves to wrong me by the most barborous oppressing of my tenants, but had also overrun a great part of three or four Sherriffdoms. Then the general grief of so many dutiful subjects made the exterminion of this damnable race of people to be resolved upon, as most expedient, and necessary for your Majesty's peace, and obedience, and the surety of your Majesty's dutiful subjects dwelling in these parts, which work, since it took beginning, hath been ever chargeable to your Majesty, painful to the country, and with my particular very great hurt, and skaithe. Having had besides many former losses, within less than these eighteen months, two hundred merkland wasted, and spoiled by that Clan, conducted by that same man now recommended. My tenants, their wives and young children unmercifully murdered, and such of them as escaped the sword, in regard their houses were all burned, being left in the open air, both the aged, and younger sort were killed with cold. It may perhaps by some be supposed that this service is, at some good point, But when all both noblemen, barons, and gentlemen who have most interest in this work were convened, then it was among them resolved, and by them to your Majesty's Council proposed and there also allowed of, That without transplantation of this Clan no quietness to these bounds, could be expected, so as this man's repossession to any lands which by strong hand he held formerly without any right at all Implies a direct ranversing of whatever, was intended for the good of that service, the particular harm and inconvenience whereof being unfelt, no doubt to those who have been so earnest solicitors in the behalf of this man. So are they as far mistaken in their undertaking for his good behaviour, in time coming. In regard there is no doubt at all, but when he finds himself of new, strengthened with a fresh growth of this unhappy weed (whereof there be of male kind, some sixteen score of new arising) like enough he will put who promises in his behalf, to a personal action for their relief. And because hard experience has made me more sensible, than others, and my duty to your Majesty doth enforce me to conceal nothing of my knowledge herein, I have presumed to acquaint your Highness with the truth Assuring your Majesty on my credit, that if the ringleaders of this Clan shall have the liberty to dwell, and reside in their former possessions, this undercotting wood,¹ shall be found hereafter more incurable. Always for my own part having life and whole estate ever ready at your Majesty's disposing, I most humbly take my leave praying God Almighty to continue long your Highness' prosperous, and happy reign and rests your Majesty's most humble and most obedient servitor, “JAMES R.

“Right trusty and right well beloved cousin and counsellor we greet you well. Our right trusty and well beloved cousin the Earl of Argyle now going into that our kingdom to give an account of the service against the MacGregors which we think now almost at an end, we have thought good hereby to signify until you that we are well pleased that at the accompt of the said service our aforesaid cousin shall be charged, with none other but of the surname of MacGregor, seeing for them only and none other his commission was given. And seeing that such of them as are already brought in and have found caution for their good behaviour may think themselves free if they survive their cautioners, and so take occasion to return to their former trade of life, for avoiding of that inconvenience, we think it expedient, that you call before you all such as became cautioners for any of the said MacGregors and cause them bind and oblige their Heirs and successors as well as themselves, and because this case is as yet singular in the person of Gregor M^cCoule here, it is our pleasure, that you cause him find new caution for his good behaviour, or else commit him to ward. And whereas we are informed that one Gregor M^cPatrick being brought in at the time of the incoming of Robert Abroch was delivered to the Earl of Perth and by him to the Master of Madderty we see no reason (if the said information be true) that the Earl of Argyll should be further charged with him, but you should cause the said Earl of Perth and Master of Maderty, be answerable for him in all time coming. And all these particularities commending to your special consideration we bid you farewell. At our Manor of Greenwich, 8 June 1613.’—Register House.

"June 24. There have been three meetings kept with the Erll of Ergyle anent the ClanGregour, at the first meeting which was upon the 19. of this instant, he make an accompt of that roll of 70 persons, resting upon him at his last accompt made in the month of July 1612, of this number he exhibited six notable malefactors who were all executed upon the 22 of this instant, and one of them at his execution confessed the slaying of twelve men with his hand at Glenfrone. He gave an account of five other notable limmers slain in this service since the last accompt, and one hanged at Striveling and he reduced the rest of the foresaid number of 70 to 28 persons or thereby, of whom there is only two notable limmers and chieftains to wit Allaster M^cAllaster wreck¹ and Duncan M^cEanduy, the rest as the landlords have confessed, are but base followers of the other two chieftains. The Council have held them still upon the Earl until he exhibit them or make them answerable.

"At the second meeting upon the 22 of this instant his Majesty's missive anent the boys and young ones was presented and read, and the Laird of Laweris confessed that he had in his hands threescore and ten of them being the sons of these who have been executed and slain in this service, or are presently outlaws. There was a long dispute and reasoning first among the Council themselves and then with the landlords how these young ones might be entertained, and kept in the lowlands, conform to the tenour of his Majesty's missive, but there were so many difficulties proposed, and found out in that matter, as made that point of the service not likely to take effect, that way. It was proposed to the landlords that seeing this service which has been so troublesome and chargeable to his Majesty concerned principally them, and that the well, and benefit thereof only redounded to them, that therefore they ought to take some burden, in this point anent the boys, and either find out the means how they might be put to crafts, as prentices in burrow towns, or then entertained some other way, and the landlords being earnestly dealt with to make some overtures anent this matter, they flatly refused to take any burden therein, seeming by the conjectures of their discourse, that the burden of that point of the service should be upon his Majesty and the country, The Council perceiving that they could not draw the landlords to any reasonable terms in this point, and the Laird of Lawers being very earnest to have the boys taken off his hands, seeing the entertaining of them, and their keepers which completed the number of one hundred persons was very chargeable unto him, the Council then laid to the landlords charge that they would take the keeping of the boys only until his Majesty's will and pleasure were returned, what further course should be taken with them, which they likewise refused, whereupon they being removed, and the Council having at length reasoned upon that point, it was found that in reason, the landlords ought to have the burden of this matter, and therefore it was resolved that Lawers should still keep the boys, until Lammas, betwixt and which time, the farther knowledge of his Majesty's pleasure was expected. And that the landlords should make payment every one of them of the sum of ten merks for every merkland pertaining unto them formerly possessed by the ClanGregour and that for the charges and entertainment of the boys, during the months of June and July. And they were ordained to consign that sum in the hands of the Clerk of Council to have been delivered by him to Lawers, and the double of this sum was enjoined to those who disobeyed. This being intimated to the landlords, and they finding no means to eschew the same, they craved two days leisure to be advised whether they would embrace that condition or make some other overture how the turn might be done which was granted.

“At the third meeting upon the 24 of this instant the landlords being of new heard anent the boys, they agreed to take the keeping of them until Lambmes and that they should be distributed among them according to their merklands, allotting a boy to every four merkland. The Council accepted the condition, and has ordained them, to send and receive the boys from the Laird of Lawers, betwix and the first of July with this certification to the disobeyers, that they shall be compelled to pay to Lawers twenty merks for every one of their merklands formerly possessed by the ClanGregour.

“The Landlords did earnestly urge the transplantation of the whole name of the ClanGregour, man, wife, and bairn. This was thought a matter not only of difficulty but of great rigour, and extremity to transplant men, and families, who had renounced their names, and found caution to be lawful, and answerable subjects, and it was likewise thought against reason, to remove them from the places of their present abode, and to settle them in any peaceable part of the incountry, among honest and lawful subjects, and their cautioners did likewise, propone their impossibility to answer for them if they were transplanted.

"It was demanded of the landlords if they would be content that the whole cautioners of the ClanGregour should be discharged upon that condition of transplantation, but they gave no direct answer to that proposition.

"It was demanded of them, whether or not, they had their lands now peaceable and free of the ClanGregour They all granted, that they had their lands free and peaceable of the ClanGregour.

" Charge to all the landlords to appear on the 15 Nov. as before.

" Nov. 18. The Landlords of the ClanGregour. being summoned to the 16 day of this instant, anent that contribution promised for making of their lands peaceable, a number of them compeiring, the rest being absent They who compeired, except the few number, who at the first consented to the payment of the said contribution, refused altogether to contribute to that eirand alledging that the consent of a small number of their neighbours could on no ways bind or oblige them, and the Laird of Glenurquhy in respect he had done service himself against the Clangregour, and had sustained great losses and skaith by them, he stood by his first protestation made against the payment of the said contribution, and although remonstrance was made unto them of the pains his Majesty had taken by his officers, and ministers in that errand, the great charges which his Majesty had sustained, therthrough, and the good effect and success flowing from his Majesty's travels (travails?) to the ease, comfort, and relief of the landlords, and freething of them from the oppression of that race, yet they could nowise be induced to consent to the said contribution, whereupon the Council continued them to this 17. day of Nov. and in the meantime they were privately dealt with, to give unto his Majesty satisfaction, but no entreaty could move them to yield, And they being this day of new brought before the council and at length heard some of the council, were of opinion, that the consent given by some of the landlords ought, and should bind, and oblige the whole remanent, because the action for the which the contribution was craved was common to all and they were all conjunct partakers of the benefit of that service The most part of the council, were of opinion that the consent of a small party could nowise engage nor bind the rest, and so by a plurality of votes it was resolved in this, the absentees in respect of noncompeirance to defend, and these who consented or decerned to pay, the dissenters are dismissed without an answer. It was objected by some of these who consented that the service was not yet ended, and that the causes for which the contribution was granted, were not fully accomplished, the council has appointed unto them Tuesday next to give in the particulars in writing, and the Earl of Argyll to answer thereunto Some course will be taken with the bairns of the ClanGregour at this next meeting with the landlords.—Balfour's Collections.

“ Nov. 26. Letter Sir Thomas Hamilton to the King.

“ ‘ Most Sacred Souerane.

“ ‘ These days bygone your Majesties council have dealt with some of the Makgregours landlords, who being summoned, compeired before them the (rest being absent) To give their advice anent the order to be taken with the rebells children, wherein the care of these landlords appeared to be rather to disburden themselves and the highlands of these children, and to have them transported and kept besouth Forth and Clyde, nor to propose any overture for the general good of the kingdom which the Council has not allowed because, the landlords being the men most interested in the extirpation of the Clangregour, in respect of the relief of their dangers, and daily troubles, and making their lands formerly possessed by these rebells peaceable, and profitable to themselves, they had neither bestowed travels, nor charges in their pursuit, but left all the burden upon your Majesty, and being now pressed to pay their contribution which some of them had long ago promised these would have revoked their promises, and the rest being absent, and not having given their express consent, thought that no lawful decret could be given by the council, to compel them to pay. And albeit they allege that if the bairns rise to men, they may be of number and power, to renew the trouble of the country, yet it is found by particular examination, that there is not ten of these children above the age of five years, And the landlords confess that if order were taken with ten or twelve, who are the sons of chieftains, the whole remnant of that number are so base and beggarly, that they will never be able to make trouble. The council finding the landlords so unwilling to pay their contribution, think it fittest, to leave the charge of the bairns upon them until they consent to some such overture, as may secure the country from their future rebellion. And because the small number of mean landlords, who at first consented to pay the contribution, complain of their double burden of contribution, and entreteining the children, the council has thought to supersede the exaction of that contribution, until some more solid order be taken with the bairns. Suspicion is conceived that Glenurchie, Lawers or some other landlords may by their letters, or otherwise inform your Majesty, that it is necessary that the bairns be transplanted to the lowland, which course the council is not likely to allow Therefore eschewing your Majesty's trouble by their importunity it appears fit that the matter be remitted to the council but if your Majesty conclude anything to the contrary, I shall ever yield that obedience, and employ such diligence in accomplishing your Majesty's directions, which my faithful duty and your Majesty's gracious favours, does strictly require. So praying God to grant your Majesty long life constant health prosperity and contentment rest &a &a.'

"1613. Nov. 30. An act anent the bairns of the Clangregour and an act anent the compt by the Erll of Ergyll.

"Charge against the Erll of Perth and Lord Madertie for exhibition of Robert Abroche and Charges against the Laird of Grant for exhibition of the Clangregour being in his hands. Charges against the Erll of Enyee for exhibition of M^cGregour being in his hands. An Act relieving the landlords of all payment of the contribution in respect the burden of the bairns is laid upon them.

"Same date. There have been divers meetings with the Erle of Ergyl and the landlords of the Clangregour, anent this last accompt, made by the Erle upon the accomplishment of that service, and what course was most fit and expedient to be taken with the bairns who were apprehended by the Laird of Lawers, And the landlords were deeply sworn to declare the truth of that, which rested in the accomplishment of the service. And this being the appointed day for making of the accompts, and for hearing of the objections proposed by the landlords against the same, the Erll gave in a roll containing the names of these who rested upon him at his last accompt, made in the June last, being thirty persons in number or thereby This number he has reduced to twelve persons who are to be declared fugitives, and outlaws, and accordingly to be prosecuted with fire and sword, and proclamations are to be directed against the reseters of them, besides this number there are two persons and one in the Erle of Enyees hands against whom charges are directed for their exhibition, and charges are to be directed against the Erle of Perth and the Lord Madertie for the exhibition of Robert Abroche and Gregor Gar M^cPhadrick V^cConneil who as yet have not found caution nor given their obedience.

"There have been divers conferences anent the bairns, and sundry overtures have been proposed to the landlords thereanent whereunto they could not agree, so that the first course which was agreed upon in the month of June last, anent the distribution of the bairns among the landlords, according to the proportion of their merklands was thought meet to be followed out. The small number of landlords who consented to the contribution of £60 out of the merkland, finding that this course anent the distribution of the bairns, among the hail landlords, brought a double trouble upon them, making them subject both to the payment of the contribution, and to the entertainment of the bairns, wheras they who dissented from the contribution, being the greatest number, and of the best rank, were only subject to the entertainment of the bairns. They therefore not only protested against the payment of the contribution unless they were free of the bairns, but with that they made offer to receive the bairns, with condition to be free of the contribution. The council having advised upon this proposition, and finding that with reason, they could lay no burden of the bairns upon those, who consented to the contribution, seeing their consent was conditional to be free of all farther trouble and burden of that race, and considering therewithal, that they were but a small number who consented, and that their parts of the contribution were of little avail, they therefore thought meet to take hold of this proposition, and offer, and proposed the same to the hail landlords who were present, who have consented thereunto, upon these conditions To wit, that the bairns shall be equally distributed among them according to the proportion of their merklands, that they shall be subject to keep them furthcoming and answerable, whenever they shall be called for, until they be of the age of 18 years, at which time they shall exhibit them to the council to be then taken order with as shall be thought meet under such a pecunial pain as shall be agreed upon, answerable to the rank and quality of every bairn, if the bairn shall happen to escape from his keepers, the resetter of the bairn, shall not only be held to relieve the landlord who had the keeping of him, of all pain and danger that he may incur through his escaping, but likewise shall be subject to such an arbitral censure, and punishment, as the council shall inflict upon them. The bairn so escaping, being within 14 years of age, shall be scourged and burnt on the cheek for the first escape, and for the next escape shall be hanged, and if he be past the age of 14 years, he shall be hanged for the first escape, and proclamations are to be directed and published therupon.

“The clerk of Register, and the lord Kilsyth are to meet with the landlords, and by their advice to make a catalogue and roll of the hail bairns, and accordingly to make a distribution of them and to set a sum upon every bairn according to the which sum the keepers shall be answerable for them. The first question proposed by the landlords, upon the point of accomplishment of the service, was the decease of some of the cautioners for the Clangregour, whereby they are of opinion, that the cautioner being dead the party for whom caution was found was free, In this point they received satisfaction in respect of an act of parliament bearing that all cautioners taken for the good rule and quietness of the Highlands and the borders, shall oblige the heirs of the cautioners as well, as the cautioner himself. The next point proposed by them was against insufficiency of some two or three of the cautioners, In this point they were satisfied by directions given for renewing of these cautions. Thirdly they objected against the Erle of Ergyll, as not being a good caution, to this it was answered that the Erle was the best cautioner they could get seeing he was answerable and obedient to the law, and more able to relieve (reduce?) these for whom he was caution, under obedience, than any other cautioner was. Fourthly they urged transplantation of all those who have found caution, this was thought most unreasonable, as being a mean to break them all loose, and to bring their cautioners in trouble and danger, seeing the most part of their cautioners have them on their own lands, and would not have been caution for them if they had known of any such motion anent their transplantation.—Balfour's Collections.

“Dec. 1. The which day in presence of the Lords Kilsyth and Clerk of Register, who were appointed to take up a catalogue and roll of the bairns of the Clangregour, compeired personally the lairds of Glenurquhie elder and younger, Buchannan, Weyme, Lawares, and Makfarlane Duncan Meanyees of Comrie, and Robert Campbell of Glenfalloch and gave their solemn oaths to give up according to their knowledge a true roll of the haill bairns of the Clangregour who are presently outlaws, or have been slain or executed or departed this life as outlaws, and according to their oath they made a list and roll of the said bairns, and divided them in three ranks, to wit, the bairns of chieftains, the bairns of under chieftains, and the bairns of the inferior sort, being in number fourscore or thereby the oldest of them not past thirteen years of age, and the most part about eight, six, and four years old. The bairns are to be distributed among the landlords according to the proportion of their lands, the extent whereof was likewise given up, by the persons foresaid upon their oath of verity the pain enjoined to the landlords for keeping and presenting of every bairn of a chieftain £200 for every bairn of an under chieftain £100 and for every bairn of meaner sort £40. The havers and keepers of such bairns as come not in the Laird of Laweris hands are by proclamation commanded to keep them, under the pain foresaid.

“Such persons of the Clangregour as were omitted out of the book and roll given to the Erl of Ergyle by the landlords, are to be inserted in the fugitive roll, and accordingly are to be prosecuted, and pursued, because they lie out, and have never offered their obedience.—Balfour's Collections.

“1613. Dec 2. The Marquis of Huntly being written for, for giving his opinion anent the form of proceeding against Allane Makeanduy, excusing himself, by reason he was somewhat diseased. Committee appointed 9. Dec.—Balfour's Collections.

“Same date. The Lords assign the 15 day of May next to Johnne Gordoune of Buckie for exhibition of Johnne Gromach M^cGregour.—Record of Secret Council.

“Dec. 21. James & a. Whereas of our special grace, and mercy and for pacifying the rebellious provinces of the Irish in our kingdom of Scotland, we have forgiven our lovit Duncane Dowglas formerly surnamed M^cGregour of Morinsche, now Tutor of Glenstra, the displeasure of our mind, royal opinion (sectam regiam) and all process which we had either intended, or may intend, or might in any way intend, for the treasonable burning of the Barn of Blairwaddane lying within the Dukedom of Lennox, committed by the said Duncan in the month of February 1603, and for all other crimes.—Record of Privy Seal.”

It was alleged by the Laird of Madertie, that he could take no burden for Robert Abroch, because the Vicount of Haidingtoun had taken a dealing for him, and would find caution to make him furth coming and answerable. And for Gregor gair, it was alleged that he was in Ireland, And so there was no necessity of finding caution for him. To this, it was answered by the Laird of Lundie in name of the Erle of Ergyle, that the said Robert Abroche and Gregor Gair were taken by the Erle of Perth, the Lord of Madertie, and the Master his son, and that they were a long time in their company, and that promise was made in their names to the Council to make them answerable, and forth coming And in this respect it was craved that the Erll of Ergyll might be exonerated, and freed of them The Council being loath to quiet the Erll of Ergyll of them until first they found some other lawful debtor to make them answerable, they have assigned unto the Erll of Ergyll, the 22 of this instant, for proving that the Erll of Perth, the Lord of Madertie, and his son ought to be answerable for the said Robert Abroch and Gregor Gair.

"The Erll of Enzie compeired by the gudeman of Buckie, who alleged that the Erll could not, with his honour nor credit, exhibit Duncan M^ceanduy, without a condition and surety for his life. Because he, at the special request and desire, of the Erll of Ergyle took the said Duncan, and made promise to him that he should be in no danger of his life. The council thought this no lawful excuse, for the Erll of Enzie, and have ordained letters to be directed to denounce him rebel, for non exhibition of the said Duncan, and have ordained the denunciation to be superceded until the 10. March.—Balfour's Collections.

"Feb. 22. The Laird of Grant compeiring before the council, granted that he had John roy M^cGregour, son to Duncan M^cean chame, and has acted himself to exhibit him, upon the first council day, of April. This John Roy is that same man for whom there was so much contestation in his Majesty's presence between the Laird of Grant and Archibald Campbell servitor to the Erll of Ergyle, he has likewise granted two other M^cGregours, and has taken the 10 of March for their exhibition.—Balfour's Collections.

"Feb. 23. Letter Argyll to the King.

"'Please your Majesty I have been this long time busy in finding the certainty of Grant's guiltiness, for the receipt of one of the Clangregour, (whom he denied in your Majesty's presence, as the copy of the article set down before your Highness will testify) and having accused him before your Majesty's council he is now forced to confess the having of him at divers times, but thinks to free himself of that crime, by procuring your Majesty's pardon to that rebel, which I most humbly entreat your Majesty not to yield to, until such time as the Laird of Grant suffer his trial, in the rest of the articles, agreed upon in your Majesty's presence, which I shall go about, with all reasonable diligence, so reposing on your Majesty's gracious favour in this I rest. Your Majesty's most humble and obedient subject Argyll. Leith, Feb. 23. 1614.'—Balfour's Collections.

"March 12. Ane letter to Gawin Colquhoun in Port, of the escheit of umqle Allaster M^cGregour M^ckean, and speciallie the contractis bandis &a granted be Sr Johnne Campbell of Ardkinglas knight, Johne Graham alias M^cGregour M^cKean, to the said umqle Alaster M^cGreigor, concerning the lands of Auchindowaane, annual rent of £100 from lands of Innerranich miln thereof, and piece of land callit Borriklie, in the King's hands thro' forfeiture, and execution of the said Allaster.—Register of Privy Seal.

"April 1614. April 2. The Remission of John Murray formerly (alias) called Gregour M^cGregour.

"James, by the grace of God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, &a Defender of the Faith. To all his good subjects, to whom these present letters shall come, greeting. Wot ye, that whereas of our special grace, favour, and mercy, we have forgiven and by the tenour of these presents, forgive John Murray formerly called Gregour M^cGregour V^cCoule chere, in lie¹ bray of Balquhiddier, All displeasure of our mind, Royal opinion, and all prosecution, which we either intend against him, or may in any way in future have, for art and part of the traitorous burning, and manslaughter, committed at the house and lands of Aberroughle, And for art and part of the deperadation and spoliation of goods in the said house and lands belonging to Colin Campbell brother german of Sir James Campbell of Lawers Kt and for every action and crime, civil as well as criminal, which may follow hereupon or be competent against the said John.

"1614. June 23. Robert Abroche M^cGregour appeared before the council and formerly declared that he had renounced the surname of M^cGregour and taken that of Ramsay. The council ordained Sir George Ramsay (elder brother of Viscount Haddington, and afterwards by creation Lord Ramsay of Dalhousie) to be his surety under penalty of 1000 merks.—Record of Secret Council, Treasurer's Books.

"July 28. The 24. day of August next is appointed to the Erle of Ergyle for making of his last accompt, of the service against the Clangregour. and the hail landlords are written for, to be here that day.—Balfour's Collections.

“August 24. Commission for trying the resettlers of the Clangregour. Forasmuch as albeit the reset of the rebellious thieves and limmers of the Clangregour, their wives, bairns, goods, and geir, has been prohibited, and discharged by many acts, and proclamations made, and published heretofore; Nevertheless the chief and principal cause which has procured, and still procures, their continuance in rebellion, and which has frustrated, and disappointed the effectual execution, of his Majesty's service, against them, doth proceed from the reset, supply, protection, and maintenance, which they find among great number of people, as well inhabiting the countries, and bounds next adjacent unto them, as in some other parts of the country, who in outward show and appearance falsely pretending to be unfriends, to the said limmers, do notwithstanding covertly, and obscurely, not only supply all their necessities, and wants, but reset them in their houses, and take their goods, and geir in keeping, to their own use and behoof, so that at all times, when these fugitive limmers are pursued, or any course intended against them, for reducing of them to obedience, their resets, and starting holes, are so sure and certain unto them, as the most part of the courses intended against them, have proved fruitless, highly to the offence, and contempt of his Majesty, and fostering of the said limmers in their insolencies. And whereas bypast experience in the like cases gives clear evidence, that nothing is more forcible, against traitorous rebels and fugitives than to cut them short of their resets, and startingholes, which cannot be well done but by exemplary punishment, to be inflicted upon the resettlers; Therefore the King's Majesty with advice of his Majesty's Secret Council, has resolved no longer to overlook that proud contempt of his Majesty's authority in resetting of the said limmers. . . . but to use some exemplary punishment, upon them to the terror of others, to commit the like hereafter And because the probation and trial of their resets, must be by witnesses. And his Majesty and Lords of his Secret Council being loath to weary his Majesty's subjects, and to draw them to charges and expenses, in coming here to bear witness, in that matter, seeing the probation may be as well led, and deduced, in the particular Sheriffdoms, where the resettlers and witnesses dwell. Therefore &c.

“August 24. The Erle of Ergyle and the whole landlords of the Clangregour being written for, to be here this day, to hear the last accompt made by the Erle of Argyll, of his proceedings in that commission granted to him, against the Clangregour, and to declare their opinion if the service be accomplished, and what farther rests to be done thereintill, the said Erll of Ergyle, and almost the whole landlords compeired this day in the forenoon, and his Majesty's letter sent down for this business, being read in their hearing, the same was delivered to the landlords, with that catalogue and roll of the names of the Clangregour which was delivered to the Erle of Ergyle, at his acceptation of the service upon him, and in the afternoon to report their opinion what they (thought) anent the accomplishment of the service. In the afternoon they compeired, and first verbally declared that they could say nothing, but that the Earle of Ergyle had very worthlie behaved, and carried himself in that service. But anent the accomplishing of that service, they gave in some articles in writing, whereby they alleged that the service was not accomplished, that the condition of that service, was to have rooted out that whole race, and name, secondly that none of them should have got remission, nor been admitted to change their names, but such as had done service against their own Clan, Thirdly that some of the cautioners were not sufficient, and last, that those who had found caution, were guilty of the break and violation of sundry acts of council, made against them. To this it was answered by the Erle of Ergyle that he never accepted that service, upon condition to extirpate and root out that whole name, because it was impossible to be performed, and his Majesty did never lay such a matter to his charge, next that none had got remission, but had done service worthy of remission, and that the whole number exceeded not eight persons, and touching those who had changed their names and had found caution, the Erle alleged that no such service was to be laid to their charge, Because they craved no pardon nor favour, but found caution to be answerable, as well for bygones as times to come, upon these points he and the landlords contested, and it was farther alleged by the landlords, that the most part of them who had found caution, were guilty of capital crimes. They being at length heard hereupon they are continued till the morn, and the landlords are ordained to condescend in particular, upon those who are guilty of these crimes. And upon the names of the cautioners who are not sufficient, to the effect order may be taken therewith, as accords.

“The Erle of Ergyle and the landlords being of new heard, the landlords proposed sundry demands, first that the whole Clangregour should be transplanted, which was thought unreasonable, and not agreeable to the course of justice, nor well, of the service, Next that the Erll should not be freed of the service, until first some proof were had, of the obedience of those who are under caution. This point was thought reasonable, and the landlords are ordained to charge such as have offended, to appear at several diets, between and the last of February.

“The number of outlaws is reduced to eleven persons, and remissions are ordained to be exped, to fourteen persons, who have done service and whose service was qualified, in presence of the landlords.—Balfour’s Collections.

“Dec. 9. Letter Dumfermline to "1615. The Lords appoint to the landlords of the ClanGregour any time betwix and the last day of June for charging of the ClanGregour to compeir before them to render them their obedience.—Record of Secret Council.

"Feb. 14. At Edinburgh. The lords Commissioners appointed for managing his Majesty's rents with advice of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank knight their depute Ratify and approve a Decreet Arbitral pronounced by arbiters chosen by Argyle and Johnne Grant of Freuchie whereby the latter is decerned to pay 16,000 merks in satisfaction of all such sums of money, as the said Johnne Grant his friends and tenants are fined, for their resett, supply, and intercomuning with the ClanGregor.

"The same lords on the same occasion approved of an agreement by which Rory M^cKenzie Tutor of Kintail, Rory M^cKenzie of Redcastle and Mr John M^cKenzie of Dingwell had paid 6000 merks instead of 12,000 in which these had been fined for intercourse with the outlawed Clan. and of an agreement by which John Ross of Holme paid 600 merks instead of 1000 being his fine for the same offence. They also approved of all other agreements by which the favour shewn to the resetters of the said Clan, reduces the fines to not above a fifth of the sums adjudged, so far as his Majesty's share is concerned. They resolved that the same indulgence be extended to all who complain of the fines being too high ; of whom were a number.—Balfour's Collections."

There are in the Treasurer's Books many notices of close letters to various individuals who, as appears from this and other public Records, were about this time employed to put the ClanGregor down. The rebellions in the Isles in 1615, and the year following, engrossed almost exclusively the attention of the Secret Council :—

"Nov. 26. at Edinburgh. Johnne Buchquhannan of that Ilk and Sir George Muschet of Burne bank became sureties for certain Buchannans and others to compeir on the 6. Dec. and 'underly the lawis for airt and pairt of the slauchter of umqle Allaster Livingstoun in Corriecrombie.'"

The "Black Book of Taymouth" gives some details of the events of this year, which seem closely connected with the various negotiations which have been already recorded in the last few years. Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurchy and the Earl of Argyll seem, one as much as the other, to have done their utmost, both by force and guile, to ruin the whole Clan, for which Argyle and his brothers had the best opportunities by their access to the King, but Argyle was more lenient in some instances than those known as the "Landlords of the Clan." Amidst the cruel edicts and persecution of the children, the generous courage of the resettlers stands out in bright relief against the surrounding blackness:—

“Item in the monethe of October anno 1615. the Laird of Lawers past up to Londoun and desyrit of his Maiestie thai he wald wreit to the Counsall desyring the Counsall to send for the landislordis of the Clangregour that they wald grant ane contributioun of fyftie pund out of the merkland, and his Maiestie wald find ane way that naine of the ClanGregour sould troubill aney of thair landis nor posses thame, bot that the landislordis sould bruik thame paccablie, for Laweris luit his Maiestie to understand that, gif his Hines wald grant him that contributioun, that he sould get all theis turnis satled. quhairin trewlie Laweris haid nather pouer nor moyen to do it. The counsall wreit for the landislordis, sic as the Erle of Linlithgow the Laird of Glenurchay the Laird of Weyme, Alexander Shaw of Cambusmoir and Knockhill. The rest of the Landislordis came not. The Chancellare inquiryit of thame that wes present, gif they wald grant to the contributioun, quhilkis all zeildit to, saifand Glenurquhay, quha said he wald not grant thair to, seeing his Maiestie haid burdnit him to concur withe the Erle of Argyle in persewing of the Clangregour, becaus he knew he wald get moir skaithe be the Clangregour nor all the Landislordis wald. Heireftir the Counsall wreit for the landislordis, and desyrit tham to pey the contrabutioun, and his Maiesties will was that it sould be givin to the laird of Laweris. Glenurquhay refusit be reassoun that he nevir zeildit to the contrabutioun and the rest of the landislordis that wes absent the first counsall day that the contrabutioun wes grantit, refusit the contrabutioun in lyke maner Sua the Laird of Laweris wes disapointit of the contrabation. Glenurquhay quarrellit the laird of Laweres and his breithrene that he sould haive tain sic interpryses in hand by his advyse, for to perturb the laird of Glenurquhay’s landis seeing that he wes the laird of Glenurquhay’s wassell, and kinsman cum of his hous, and als his sister’s sone, and that quhen Laweres house wald haive wraikitt in Laweris father’s tyme, the laird of Glenurquhay tuik in his mother, his breithrein, and sisteris in his hous, and saivit the hous of Laweris fra rowein and wraik.

“Item in the moneth of December 1615. the Laird of Laweris socht ane suit of the Counsall for enterteineing of thrie or four scoir of the bairnis of the Clangregour, and desyrit the Counsall to burdein the landislordis with the sowme of 2000 merkis in the moneth thairfoir. The laird of Glenurquhay desyrit the Laird of Laweris and his breithrin not to truble him with that suit, seeing that they knew he had gottin moir skaithe of the Clangregour nor all the subiectis of the kingdome, and that he had done moir service to his Maiestie nor all the rest in oppressing of the Clangregour. Laweris refusit that Glenurquhay sould haiv aney curtassie, bot that he sould pey as the rest did, for the enterteineing of the bearnis of the Clangregour . . . For the quhilk refusall Glenurquhay mett with the landislordis, sic as the Erle of Tullibardin, the Erle of Linlithgow, the Erle of Perth, My lord of Madertie, and the rest of the landislordis, and they tuk the burding upone thame-selffis for ane space, to enterteineing the bairnis quhairby Laweris wes disappointit of his tua thousand merkis.

“Item, thairefter the Erle of Argyle gatt of his Maiestie the fynns of the receptaris of the Clangregour, and the Laird of Laweris and his Breitherein for the tyme beand, daylie waitaris on upoun the Erle of Argyle gat the fourth pairt of the fynnis to thame selffis Glenurquhay desyrit the Laird of Laweris and his breithereine that his tennentis sould not be trublit in the fynnis, seand that he and his tennentis haid maid moir service to his Maiestie on the Clangregour, nor all the rest of the subjectis in Scotland, and haid gottin moir skaithe be thame nor thame all, and that it wes no reassoun that his men sould be fynned, seinge his countray wes heallie brint, and sindrie of his tennentis slaine in that service. Laweris and his breithereine ansueris wes that they wald grant no courtassie to Glenurquhay, quhairupone Glenurquhay postit up to Londoun to his Maiestie quhair the Erle of Argyle wes for the present and declareit to his Maiestie how that his tennentis notwithstanding of their good service, and great skaithe, wes pressed to be fynned, quhilk his Maiestie declarit wes no reassoun, and sua wreit doun to the Counsall, desyring (that none) of Glenurquhy’s tennentis or seruentis sould be trublit with ony of the foirsaid fynnis. To conclude the hous of Laweris hes bein verie ungraitfull to the hous of Glenurquhay at all other tymes.”

Thus the chief persecutors fell out amongst themselves.

“June 28. Continuation of the Scottish Parliament which at this date made the following Act ‘anent the ClanGregour.’

“Our Soveraine Lord and estates of this present Parliament Remembering how that his sacred Majesty being very justly moved with a hatred and detestation of the barbarous murders and insolencys committed by the Clangregoure upon his

Majestie's peaceable and good subjects of the Lennox at Glenfrone in the month of February 1603. And how that the 'bare and simple name of M^cGregoure maid that haill Clane to presume of their power, force and strength' and did encourage them without reverence of the Laws or fear of punishment to go forward in their Iniquities upon the consideration whereof His Majesty with advice of (his) Secret Council made divers Acts and ordinances against them especially one Act upon the 3. day of April 1603. whereby it was ordained that the name of M^cGregoure should be altogether abolished. And that the haill persons of that Clan should renounce their name and take them some other name. And that they, nor none of their posterity, should call themselves Gregor or M^cGregour hereafter under the pain of death." Recapitulation of other Acts after which the present Act continues: "And his Majesty and the said estates acknowledging the said Acts having been made upon very good respect and consideration for the peace and quietness of the country, And therewithal considering that divers of that Clan, who renounced their names and found caution for their good behaviour are departed this life, And that great numbers of their children are now rising up and approaching to the years of majority who if they shall take again the name of M^cGregoure renounced by their parents upon solemn oath the number of that Clan in few years, will be as great, as any time heretofore. Therefore His Majesty with advice of his said estates, ratifies, allows, and approves the Acts above written, of the tenour and dates foresaid, in all and sundry points, clauses, and articles contained thereintill, and conform thereto Declares, statutes, and ordains that if any person or persons of the said Clan who have already renounced their names, or shall hereafter renounce, or change their names, or if any of their bairns, and posterity shall at any time hereafter Assume or take to themselves the name of Gregoure or M^cGregoure, or if any of them shall keep trysts, conventions, and meetings, with any person or persons calling, and avowing themselves to be M^cGregoures, That every such person or persons assuming, and taking to themselves, the said name, and who shall keep the said trysts, conventions, and meetings shall incur the pain of death, which pain shall be executed upon them without favour, for which purpose his Majesty, with advice of his said estates, ordains and commands the Sherrifs, Stewards, Bailzies of regality, Justices of peace, and their deputes, within their several bounds, where any of the persons contravening this present Act. and remains to take, and apprehend them, and committ them to sure ward therein to remain upon their own expensys ay and order, and direction be given for their punishment as accords."

1617. In the same Parliament of King James VI. at Edinburgh another Act was passed connected with Highland customs.

"June 28. Anent discharging of Caulpes.

"Our Sovereigne Lord, and estates, understanding and considering the great hurt and skaith which his Majesties Lieges have sustained these many years bygone by the Chiefs of Clans within the Highlands and Isles of this kingdome by the unlawful taking from them, their children, and executors, after their decease, under the name of caulpes of their best aught, whether it be ox, mear, horse, or cow, alledgeing their predecessors to have been in possession thereof for maintaining and defending of them against their enemies and evil willers of old and not only the said Chiefs of Clans will be content to uplift his Caulpe, but also three or four more, every one of them will alleadge better right then other and every one of them after ane other will uptake the same until four or five several caulpes will be taken from one person howbeit never ane of the said Clans have right thereto, or to the lands which the persons occupys, wherefra the caulpes are uplifted And so severe are they that every ane of them after ane other will pull their horses and oxen out of their Plowes and Harrows, in the very time of their greatest businesse and labours. so that many of his Majesties subjects which of old were enriched with sufficient store of goods and Bestial and thereby made his Highness and others having right, thankful payment of their mails, kaines and duties indebted by them yearly to his Majesty and others having right, are now by the extortion of the said Chiefs of Clans and others claiming right to the saids caulpes, and by unlawful raising and uplifting thereof become dessauperate and unable to pay his Majestie and others having good right their just duties, And seeing there was an Act made heretofore in favour of the inhabitants of Galloway by his Highnesse predecessour King James IV of worthy memory in his second parliament and eighteenth act or chapter thereof discharging the saids Caulpes and uptaking thereof in all timming coming under the pain of punishment as rebels and be ane point of dittay against them in the Justice Aire. Therefore our said Sovereigne Lord with advice of the estates of this present parliament statutes and ordains that in no time coming none of his Highnesse Lieges presume nor take in hand to intromet with nor uplift the saids Caulpes within any part of this Kingdome under the pain aforesaid."

“1621. August 29. Certain articles given in to the Lords of Secret Council for preventing of the apparent trouble like to be raised by the Clangregour, to the disturbance of his Majesties peace and the disquieting of the country.

“Whereas there is a new breed and generation of this Clan risen up which daily increases in number, and force, and are begun to have their meetings, and go in troops athort the country, armed with all offensive weapons, and some of the ring-leaders of them, who once gave their obedience, and found caution are broken loose, and have committed sundry disorders in the country as namely upon the Duke of Lennox and the Laird of Craigrostan That therefore the former act made against such of the Clangregour as were at Glenfroone and at the herships and burning of the lands pertaining to the Lairds of Glenurquhy, and Luss, and Coline Campbell of Abirurquhill, that they should wear no armour, but a pointless knife to cut their meat be renewed with this addition, That the said act be extended againt the whole name.

“That some of the principal Landlords and cautioners such as the Earls of Perth, and Tullibardine, the Laird of Glenurquhie, Lawers and Weyme be charged at several dyets to enter their men for a proof of their obedience. And when they are come in, that they be demitted without trouble, their cautioners in the meantime standing obliged for them. This will be a motive to cause the rest come in, when they see that no evil is intended against them, and will cause the young ones who are not under caution give their obedience. That an act be passed finding and declaring that all the landlords who suffer any of the Clangregour to dwell upon their land and take mail and duty, plaint and court of them shall be answerable for them, and their doings, seeing sundry landlords set their land to the Clangregour for a greater rent, than poor men are able to pay which is easy for them seeing that they take from all men. That missives be directed to the Earls of Monteith, Perth and Tullibardine, to the Lord of Scone, the Laird of Glenurquhy and other barons thereabout to set out watches for keeping of the country with power to these watches to apprehend, and put to justice such masterless, broke and suspected men as they can find, with a dispensation anent whatsomever slaughter, mutilation, or other inconvenient that shall fall out in the taking of them.

“And whereas Robert Abroche is the principal man with the sons of Patrik Aldoche that are become loose, that their cautioners be charged to enter them, and that proclamations be set out against them, discharging the resett, supply, and intercommuning with, And that a price be set upon their head to be given to any persons that will take them or slay them or present their heads.

"Whereas the yearly compeirance of the Isle'smen has been a great occasion of reducing of them to obedience, that the like order be taken with the Clangregour.

"Forasmuch as the King's Majesty having taken great pains and travel and bestowed great charges and expenses for suppressing of the insolencies of the lawless lymmers of the Clan, which formerly was called Clangregour, and for reducing of them to obedience, And his Majesty in his just wrath and indignation against that whole race, having abolished the name thereof, as most infamous and not worthy to be heard of in a country, subject to a Prince who is armed with Majesty, power, and force to execute vengeance, upon such wretched and miserable caitives as dare presume, to lift their heads, and to offend against his Majesty, and his laws, whereof a great number of the principal ringleaders of that Clan have found the proof, by condign punishment, which has been executed upon them, according to their demerits In the execution whereof although his Majesty has had very good reason to have gone forward, till the whole persons of that Clan had been totally extirpated and rooted out, yet his Majesty out of his accustomed natural disposition, and inclination to clemency and mercy was graciously pleased to receive a number of them to mercy, after that they had renounced their names, and found caution for their future obedience, so that for some years thereafter they were quiet, and little or no din was heard of them, who had tasted of his Majesty's clemency, and mercy, as namely Robert Abroche, Duncane, Allaster, Patrik, Donald and Johnne M^cGregouris sons to umqle Patrik Aldoche M^cGregour, being most unworthy of the favour, and mercy shown unto them, and being wearied of the present estate, and quietness, which his Majesty by the power, and strength of his royal authority, has established throughout all the corners of this kingdom, preferring the beastly trade of blood, theft, reif, and oppression wherein unhappily they were brought up, to law and justice. They have broken loose, and have associated unto them a number of the young brood of that Clan who are now risen up, And with them they go in troops and companies athort the country, armed with bows, darlochis, hacquebutis, pistolletis, and other armour committing a number of insolencies upon his Majesty's good subjects in all parts where they may be masters. And they do what in them lies to stir up the whole Clan to a new rebellion highly to his Majesty's offence and contempt, and hurt of his good subjects, And whereas the liberty which these unworthy limmers have taken, to wear armour, And the reset, supply and comfort, which they find, in some parts of the country has encouraged them to break out in their disorders Therefore his Majesty with advice of the Lords of his Secret Council has statuted, and ordained, that no person or persons whatsomever who are called M^cGregouris, and who keep that name, and profess and avow themselves, to be of that name, shall at no time hereafter, bear nor wear any armour, but a pointless knife, to cut their meat under the pain of death which pain, shall be executed upon them who shall happen to contravene, without favour or mercy And whereas the said Robert Abroche, and the said Duncane, Allaster, Patrik, Donald, and John, sons to Patrik Aldoche, are the chief and principal ringleaders in these new disorders, and draw after them numbers of simple ignorant people, who are rather induced by their cruelty, than moved by any inclination, or disposition of their own, to assist and take part with them, so that they have forfeited, the favour that was shewn unto them, and have involved themselves in new mischief, and trouble, worthy of most exemplary and severe punishment. Therefore His Majesty with advice foresaid, promises, and declares by these presents that whosoever person, or persons, will take, apprehend, and present, to the said Lords, any of the persons particularly above named, and failing of them their heads, that every such person, or persons, takers, apprehenders, and presenters of the limmers foresaid or any of them, shall have the whole goods and gear, with the escheat of the persons so taken, apprehended, and presented unto them, to be used by them, as their own proper goods in time coming. And ordain letters to be directed to make proclamation &c. . . . and to inhibit reset &c. 'nor to furnish the parties above named' their followers, assisters and part takers nor furnish them meat, drink, house harbourie, nor to sell them powder, bullet, victual, armour nor any other thing comfortable unto them, nor to have intelligence with them, by word, write, nor message. But that they shoot them, and raise the fray, wherever they see them, hunt, follow, and pursue them as thieves, and traitors to God, their Prince and country, certifying them that shall do the contrary, that they shall be pursued, and punished in their persons, and fined in their goods, with all rigour at the arbitrimt of his Majesty's council and such like to command, and charge all Sherriffs, Stewards, and Magistrates to burgh and land, and all justices of peace to take and apprehend all such persons, who profess and avow themselves to be M^cGregours, and keep that name, as they shall find them to carry, bear and wear any kind of armour, but a pointless knife to cut their meat And to present them to justice to the effect the said pain may be inflicted upon them as they will answer &c.

“Forsamekle as there has been a proposition made to the Lords of Secret Council, in name of the Clangregour, proorting that they for testification of their submissive and willing disposition to become his Majesty's peaceable and willing subjects, and to live hereafter, under the obedience of his Majesty, and his laws, are not only content to redress and satisfy parties skaithed, and to find caution for their future good obedience, and for their personal compeirance before his Majesty's council upon all occasions when they shall be lawfully charged, But with that, to compeir personally before the said Lords, upon the 17 day of March now approaching, for finding of the said caution, Whereas in the meantime they be in surety to be untroubled, apprehended or warded for any cause whatsoever, And the said Lords having considered of the said proposition and finding it expedient for the good of the country, that the whole persons of the Clangregour, except Robert Abrach, who is no way comprehended in this warrant, but excepted, and reserved furth thereof, shall be secured and warranted, to come in, and to present themselves before the said Lords, to the effect abovewritten. Therefore the said Lords upon good respect, and considerations for the peace and quiet of the country, have given, and granted, and by the tenour hereof, give, and grant, their warrant, permission, and allowance, to all and sundry persons of the ClanGregour, except Robert Abroche and his followers who are specially reserved, out of this warrant, as said is, to haunt, frequent, and repair publickly, and avowedly in all parts of the country, at their pleasure, without any search, stay, and arrestment to be made for or upon them, for whatsoever deed, cause, or occasion or by any person or persons. All which stay, and arrestment (not) to be made on any person of the Clan foresaid, except Robert Abroch and his followers, as said is, The said Lords discharge and ordain to rest until the 21. day of the said month of March next, Discharging hereby all his Majesty's lieges, and subjects of all taking, apprehending, or warding of any persons of the Clan foresaid, (except before excepted) for whatsoever deed, cause, or occasion, but to suffer them peaceably brouke the benefit of this warrant, until the day abovementioned, without anything to be done, or attempted by them to the break, or violation thereof, as they will answer upon the contrary, at their peril. Providing always that in this meantime they behave themselves as peaceable and good subjects, that they forbear theft, reiff, sorning, and oppression, and the wearing of unlawful and forbidden weapons. That they keep not companies, nor societies together, nor exceed not the number of four persons, in one company, and that they give their compeirance before his Majesty's council, upon the said 17 day of March next to come certifying them, that shall fail, in any point of the premisses that they shall be pursued, and punished as thieves, rebels, and limmers, with all rigour, and that letters of publication be directed hereupon."

The ratification of the proposed arrangement after the "armistice" does not appear to be extant.

From the “Black Book of Taymouth” :—

“Item the said Sir Duncan Campbell sevint laird of Glenurchay in the moneth of . . . anno 1624. coft the tuentie merkland of Stronmelochquhan and Glenstrae fra Gregour M^cEandowie V^cGregour, Patrik and Ewine M^cGregouris his brether, callit all for the tyme Murrayis and gave to them for thair richtes and kindness of the samyn landis the soume of ten thousand pundis money.”

Thus the old land passed away from the Chief of the Clan representative of Joannis Gregorii de Glenwrquhay whose death is recorded in the “Chronicle of Fortingal” as having taken place April 1391. At that time the Macgregours certainly did not hold their lands from the Campbells, but in the recent transaction of “infeftment” to Gregor MacGregor, Sir Duncan seems to have been anxious to get the sasine properly executed before purchasing from Glenstray the estate.

“1624. Oct. 20. Robert Abborach ane MacGregor and great Lymmer who had been once or twice forgiven, and remitted by his Majesty for his oppression, upon hope of his amendment, and who yet still, continued in his courses after there had been much searching for him in the Highlands and all his friends had been charged to apprehend him came into Perth this day being Sunday, or preaching day after sermon. He fell down upon his knees having a tow about his neck, and offered his sword by the point to the Chancellor of Scotland. The Chancellor refused to accept of it and commanded the Baillies to ward him, Likeas they instantly warded him, and put both his feet in the Gadd where he remained.—Chronicle of Perth in Scott's Collections, A.D. Lib.”

1625. King James VI., the last of the Kings of Scotland exclusively, died on the 27 March 1625, in the fifty-ninth year of his age, at Theobalds.

Of all the enemies of the Clan Gregor none abused them so much, in strong words, or devised more inhuman measures of repression. He made no secret of his absolute hatred of the whole race. It should, however, be remembered that his advisers and flatterers were constantly poisoning his mind against the Clan with exaggeration and misrepresentation of facts, the Glenfroom case having been specially misjudged. Also the dauntless spirit with which fresh breaches of the peace were again and again committed particularly fretted and enraged the monarch, who had determined to quell the disorders of his kingdom, in which he certainly in great measure succeeded. In connection with his personal direction of the late affairs, the estimate of King James VI. character formed by Sir Walter Scott, as given in the "Fortunes of Nigel," may here be quoted.

"He was deeply learned without possessing useful knowledge; sagacious in many individual cases, without having real wisdom; fond of his power, and desirous to maintain and augment it, yet willing to resign the direction of that, and of himself to the most unworthy favourites; a big and bold assertor of his rights in words, yet one who tamely saw them trampled on in deeds; a lover of negotiations in which he was always outwitted; and one who feared war where conquest might have been easy. He was fond of his dignity, while he was perpetually degrading it, by undue familiarity; capable of much public labour, yet often neglecting it for the meanest amusement; a wit, though a pedant and a scholar; fond of the conversation of the ignorant and the uneducated. Even his timidity of temper was not uniform, and there were moments of his life, and those critical, in which he showed the spirit of his ancestors. He was laborious in trifles, and a trifler where serious labour was required, devout in his sentiments, and yet too often profane in his language, just and beneficent by nature, he yet gave way to the iniquities and oppression of others. He was penurious respecting money which he had to give from his own hands, yet inconsiderately and unboundedly profuse of that which he did not see. In a word, those good qualities which displayed themselves in particular cases and occasions were not of a nature sufficiently firm and comprehensive to regulate his general conduct, &c."

Having reached the end of James VI. long reign and recorded the relinquishment of the lands of Glenstray and the final submission of Robert Abroch, it may here be well to pause, before turning to some events in the north of Scotland and following onwards the later career of the "Nameless" Clan.

A.—Introduction, page 2. Correspondence of Sir Robert Douglas, and John Murray, Esq., afterwards Sir John MacGregor Murray, 1st Baronet, 1769.

No. 1. Mr Murray's best compliments attend Sir Robert Douglas. He sends him inclosed three sheets of the scroll genealogical account of the family of MacGregor. Gathering the materials of it has cost him no small trouble for several years past, but he has the satisfaction to think his labours have not been entirely thrown away. Dr Gregory has seen and been pleased to approve of it. As this Clan is upon a different footing from all others, and have for some ages past been the football of fortune, it became absolutely necessary to enquire into and give a succinct account of the different causes of their misfortunes, in order to justify them, and render the remembrance of past actions less obnoxious than their enemies would chuse to paint them. This has been attempted as briefly as possible, and Sir Robert is left to judge how successfully. Meantime, as it is absolutely necessary to answer these purposes that the account be inserted fully with all the notes, Mr Murray begs Sir Robert may candidly say whether he will give it room as it stands, because if he does not, he insists that no part of it at all be mentioned, for to half do the affair would be in his opinion worse than silence. He knows the printing will be above the common run of the account of other families, and believes Sir Robert can have no other objection than that of the burden of these expenses. Let him however understand, that if he otherways seems satisfied to give it room, these will be made easy to him. What remains of it will be sent in a day or two.—Friday, 21st September 1769.

No. 2. Sir Robert Douglas presents compliments to Mr Murray—thinks himself extremely obliged to him for the papers he has sent him, and so far as he has read of them, has not the smallest objection; as soon as he has gone through the whole, will be glad to see Mr Murray.—Saturday, 22nd September 1769.

No. 3. Sir Robert Douglas presents compliments to Mr Murray, he has again carefully perused his account of the Clan M^cGregor, and is so well satisfied with it, that he is determined to print the whole papers, without leaving out one word of it, and intends to send it to the Press to-morrow, he'll therefore please return the remainder of it without fail.—Wednesday, October 4th, 1769.

The document here quoted and transcribed by Mr MacGregor Stirling in the "Chartulary" about 1830 from an entry in the Register of the Privy Council, has only recently been published, 1898, in Vol. XIV. of the Privy Council Register taken from certain miscellaneous Privy Council papers; the earlier notice of it gives proof of Mr MacGregor Stirling's faithful search.—Ed.

Battle of Glenfruin

"In an account of this battle which was fought in 1603, it is stated that early in that year Allaster MacGregor of Glenstra followed by 400 men, chiefly of his own Clan, but including also some of the Clan Cameron and Anverich? armed with halberschois, pow aixes, twahandit swordis, bowis and arrowis and with hagbutin and pistoletis advanced into the territory of Luss. Alexander Colquhoun under his royal commission granted the year before, had raised a force which some writers state to have amounted to 300 horse and 500 foot.

(Sir William Fraser's account follows.)

"Here is 'Old Ballied's' account of the Battle, written it is believed about fifty years ago.

"It is rather singular that so little should be known of the particulars of the battle of Glenfruin, and the causes that led to it, when it is considered that it is comparatively of a late date, having been fought between the Clan Gregor and the Colquhouns in the reign of James VI. No correct account has, however, been published, from which it may be inferred that the true history is lost amongst the MacGregors, for every version of the affair is more unfavourable for them than the facts would have been. One account says that it was an accidental rencontre, and another that the MacGregors were treacherously waylaid by the Colquhouns. These statements are both unfounded. The battle was deliberately resolved upon, for it was fought in the heart of the Colquhoun Country, which is of itself a proof that it was not an accidental rencontre, but what places the matter beyond a doubt is that MacGregor applied for and obtained assistance from the Clan Macpherson, with whom he had a treaty of alliance offensive and defensive, for the very purpose of invading the Colquhouns.

"There were fifty picked men sent from Badenoch to assist the Clan Gregor; but the action was over a few hours before their arrival, which perhaps was rather a fortunate circumstance, for had they taken part in the battle, it is more than probable that they would also share in the proscription. Another account states that the massacre of the boys was unintentional—that a house in which they took shelter was accidentally set on fire.

“That the massacre of the boys was unintentional on the part of the MacGregors is very true; but still it was the deliberate act of one individual, and no doubt the ClanGregor were in a certain degree responsible for the conduct of that individual, for although he was not of their name, yet he was under their banner at the time. He was a man, or rather a monster, of the name of Cameron,¹ and foster-brother of MacGregor, who was sent to take charge of the boys in order to keep them out of harm's way; and strange and unnatural as it may appear, he massacred the whole of them to the number of forty, some say sixty.

“The origin of the quarrel with the Colquhouns was as follows: A party of twelve MacGregors entered the Colquhoun country in quest of stolen or strayed cattle, and in a dreadful stormy night came to a sequestered farmhouse, the landlord of which refused them admittance, although it was quite evident that they must perish in the event of attempting to reach any other inhabited place. They, however, acted with extraordinary temper and forbearance; for in place of using force (which under the circumstances would be quite justifiable), they merely took possession of an out-house, where they lighted a fire, and having in vain applied for provisions, for which they offered payment, they had no alternative but to take a sheep from the churl's flock, which they killed, and handed its value in at a window. Having thus provided themselves with food, they were sitting round a large fire and broiling the mutton, when the savage landlord stole quietly to the top of the house and dropped a large stone into the fire through the vent-hole, which burned several of the MacGregors severely. One of them, smarting with pain, made a spring to the door, and when the landlord was in the act of descending from the house, he shot him dead. After this accident (for it cannot be called by any other name) the MacGregors returned home, but the Colquhouns having seized several of that clan (who were on their own lawful business, and knew nothing of the other affair), they hanged them like so many dogs. So gross an outrage could not be overlooked, but still the MacGregors acted with the greatest coolness, and sent a regular embassy to demand satisfaction; but every proposition was rejected by the Colquhouns, and, after much negotiation, Macgregor intimated to Colquhoun of Luss that he must hold him and his whole clan responsible for the slaughter of the MacGregors, and he accordingly prepared to put his threat in execution. The ClanGregor entered the Colquhoun country with fire and sword, and when they came to Glenfruin, and in sight of the enemy, they fell in with a number of boys who came out from Dumbarton to see the fight. They were principally schoolboys, and many of them of good families that probably had no connection whatever with either of the belligerents. MacGregor, in order to keep them out of harm's way, directed that the boys should be confined in a church or meeting-house that happened to be close by, and sent his foster-brother (one of the name of Cameron) to take charge of them, who, from what motive it is impossible to divine, massacred the whole of them as soon as he found the armies engaged. The battle of Glenfruin was soon over. The Colquhouns were defeated with great slaughter. Their chief was killed, and the Macgregor's scarcely lost a man. When they returned from the pursuit, Macgregor's first inquiry was for the boys, whom he intended to liberate and dismiss with kindness; but, learning the horrid fact that they were all butchered, he struck his forehead and exclaimed: 'The battle is lost after all.' The fate of the Dumbarton boys was so very revolting to the feelings of every person possessing any share of humanity, that it is no wonder that it created a deep and powerful prejudice against the ClanGregor; and yet they were, at least, morally innocent, and it must for ever be a matter of regret that such heavy calamities should be heaped upon the bravest clan in the Highlands for the act of one madman.

"The ClanGregor, however, were doomed to be unfortunate, as will appear by continuing their history a little further. Gregor Our, or Gregor the Swarthy, was the second in rank to the chief, but in deeds of arms he had no superior, nor perhaps an equal, in all the Highlands. Argyle was his maternal uncle, and his valour in defence of his clan and country, when outlawed and assailed by multitudes of foes, would appear more like romance than real facts. After various desperate actions, in which the ClanGregor displayed incredible prowess, but which considerably reduced their number, they learned with amazement that Argyle, at the head of an overwhelming force, was advancing to attack them. Upon the receipt of this intelligence, Gregor Our proposed to stop his uncle's progress, and, having communicated his plan to his chief, he set out alone in disguise. After several narrow escapes, he succeeded in making his way into Argyle's tent at midnight (by telling the sentry that he was the bearer of dispatches from the Government, the delivery of which admitted of no delay), and after upbraiding him for his cruelty and injustice, told him plainly that his life was forfeited unless he instantly agreed to relinquish the expedition. Argyle knew the determined character of his nephew, and it is also possible that he might be influenced by affection toward a relative of whom he might very justly be proud; but, be his motives what they may, he at once agreed to the proposed terms, and conducted Gregor safely out of the camp, and soon after disbanded his troops. Nor did his good offices cease there, for he became an advocate of the ClanGregor at Court, and obtained an armistice for them as well as a protection to Gregor Our, with instructions to him to appear before the Privy Council to explain every circumstance relating to the battle of Glenfruin and the massacre of the scholars. Gregor Our accordingly set out for Edinburgh with the concurrence of his chief, but he was no sooner gone than suspicions began to arise as to the purity of his intentions. Dark hints were first thrown out, and afterwards stated boldly as a fact, that Gregor, through the interest of his uncle and his own address, had obtained a royal grant of the chieftainship, as well as of the estates of MacGregor for himself. By these insinuations and reports (which no doubt had great plausibility in them), MacGregor¹ was driven to a state of absolute distraction, and, having learned that Gregor Our was on his way back from Edinburgh, he went to meet him, and, without the least inquiry or explanation, shot him through the heart with a pistol. On examining his papers, it was discovered that there was not a vestige of truth in these reports. The pardon to the ClanGregor was addressed to MacGregor. His estates were restored to himself, and Gregor Our did not secure a single benefit to himself, but what he got in common with every individual of the clan. This discovery drove MacGregor to madness, and he actually became deranged. The pardon was recalled, and the proscription was enforced with greater rigour than before; nor is it at all surprising that Argyle should become their bitter (as he was their most powerful) enemy."

D.—Page 300. Dr Masson, in Vol. xiv. of the published edition of the Register of the Privy Council, edited by him, gives from certain miscellaneous papers a copy "of the original Edict for the Extermination of the ClanGregor, with offers of reward for the heads of Alexander MacGregor of Glenstrae and his principal followers," two certified copies of which he has found.

The introduction to Vol. xiv., from which the foregoing is quoted, gives the following comment :—

“This Edict, the ruthless vengeance of the Government upon the MacGregors for their slaughter of the Colquhouns and other Lennox men in the Battle of Glenfruin, fought on the 7th of the same month, purports to have been the Act of the King with a number of his Nobility and Council ‘convenit upon this mater.’ It is one of the very last Acts of King James, while he was King of Scotland only ; for exactly one month afterwards by the death of Queen Elizabeth at Richmond on the 24th of March 1603, he was King also of England, and the news having come to Edinburgh on the 26th March, he took farewell of Scotland on the 5th of April and began his journey to London to assume his new dignity. The dating of the Edict would on this account alone be of some consequence. Yet one looks in vain for it in its proper place, in the Official Register of the Council. Several Acts are duly recorded there as having been passed by the King and Council at Holyrood House on the 24th of February 1603; but this is not one of them. How is the absence of so important a document from its proper place in the Register to be explained? It certainly was not because the King and Council retracted it or became ashamed of it. Although there is no Record of the Edict itself on the 24th of February, there is incidental reference to it, of an almost exulting kind, in an Act of Council passed two days afterwards, i.e. on the 26th of February, for modifying a previous business arrangement of the King and Council. An armed muster having been ordered some time before to be in attendance on the King personally at Dundee on the 8th of March for the suppression of an intended rebellion within the bounds of Angus, this Act postpones the muster to the 1st of April, expressly on the ground that, in consequence of the late 'monstrous and cruell barbaritie' at Glenfruin, the King and Council have resolved on 'persute of that wicked and unhappie race of the ClanGregour quhill they be allutterlie extirpat and ruitit out,' and that it will be convenient at the muster on the 1st of April to conjoin this new business of the pursuit of the ClanGregor with the former business of the suppression of the rebellion in Angus. In further evidence that there was no retraction of the MacGregor Edict there are the certificates¹ on the backs of the preserved copies of it now under notice that it was duly published at the market cross of Stirling on the 5th of March, at the Kirk of Dunkeld on the 6th of March, and at the market cross of Dumbarton on the 8th of March. Clearly the Edict was then running through the country and consideration for the methods for giving effect to it, must have continued to occupy the Council till those last days of March 1603 when the news of the accession of King James to the English throne drove everything else out of their heads. That we have not more distinct proofs of this, possibly even that the great Edict itself escaped due Registration in the Council Books about the time it was issued, may be owing to that long hiatus in the extant Official Register of the Council, extending exactly from the end of February 1603 to the 7th of August 1606, which we have so many other reasons to regret. It is not from the Register, for example, but from other sources that we learn that on the 3rd of April 1603, the very Sunday on which King James took leave of his Scottish subjects in an affectionate farewell speech to such of them as were present that day in the High Church of Edinburgh, there was passed by him and his Council an Act 'whereby it was ordanit that the name of M^cGregoure sulde be altogedder abolished, and that the haill persones of thatt Clan suld renunce thair name and tak thame sum uther name, and that they nor nane of thair posteritie suld call thameselffis Gregor or M^cGregoure thairefter under the payne of deid.' In a footnote (in a previous volume of the published Register of the Privy Council) where mention was made of this Act, it was assumed as identical with the original Edict for the Extermination of the M^cGregors. The assumption was natural when no copy of that original Edict was accessible or known to be extant; but it must now be corrected. We can see now the real connexion between the original Edict of the 24th of February 1603, and this Act of the 3rd of the following April. The 1st of April had been appointed for the further consideration of the Macgregor business in the muster to be held at Dundee for the business of the Angus rebellion; but when the 1st of April came the King was on the wing for London, and could not think of a journey to Dundee for any purpose whatever. In order, however, not to leave the Macgregor business exactly where it was in the Edict of the 24th of February, he and his Council had been meditating a supplement to that Edict explaining that the decreed extermination of the Macgregor Clan need not be in the form of an absolute killing out of every man, woman, or child of the Clan, but might be achieved more mercifully in part by the compulsion of every man, woman, or child of the Clan that desired still to be left alive, to abjure the name of MacGregor and assume other names. By James's departure into England, the actual execution both of the original Edict and of the supplementary or interpreting Act was devolved on the Privy Council he left behind him in Scotland, and a horrible legacy it was; but both the original Edict and the supplementary Act belong really to the last weeks of King James's own residence in Scotland, and it has seemed the more worth while to explain this, because, though the original Edict of 24th February 1603 was the initiation of all the long series of subsequent Acts against the MacGregors, it has hitherto evaded search, and is now first made accessible."

G.—Page 452. From Dr Masson's Introduction to Vol. xiv. of the Published Register of the Privy Council. "Account Book of Fines for Reset of the Clan-Gregor 1612-1624. Through the first seven years of King James's residence in his new Kingdom of England, the execution of his two MacGregor Edicts of February-April 1603 was part of the occupation of the Scottish Privy Council he had left behind him. One of the most marked incidents in Scottish History through those years was the hanging and quartering at the Market Cross of Edinburgh on the 20th of January 1604, of Alexander Macgregor of Glenstrae, the head of the Clan, together with eleven of his principal clansmen that had been apprehended along with him; but the number of other MacGregors that were hunted to death through the seven years, or dispossessed of their native crofts and dispersed through different parts of the Highlands, to attach themselves to other clans and live on under changed names defies exact reckoning. So effective had been the operation of the two Macgregor Acts of 1603 that there seems to have been a lull in the persecution of the clan from mere lack of objects to persecute. But about the year 1610 the Government had to rouse itself to fresh exertions. See in the introduction to a former volume, the extraordinary series of new fulminations against the MacGregors between that year and the year 1613, and of the new Acts then passed for the future conduct of the crusade for their extermination. Our concern now is with two of those Acts in particular. One is the Royal Ordinance at Greenwich, of date 29th April 1611, committing the supreme management of the crusade thenceforward to the Earl of Argyll with full powers of fire and sword, as well as of justiciary action, against all movements of the doomed clan and their abettors, and with the escheats of all their moveable goods for his reward. The other is the Act of Council at Edinburgh, of date 21st November 1611, appointing so many named landlords to act as select Commissioners in each of the districts of Scotland chiefly haunted by the fugitive MacGregors or most liable to visits from them. Each set of such district commissioners was to have the duty of co-operating with the Earl of Argyll by holding courts for the trial of all persons in the district that should be named to them by the Earl as accused of shelter or reset of any of the ClanGregor, their wives, bairns, or goods, since the 1st of August 1610, and of reporting to the Privy Council the names of those that should be found guilty, together with such an estimate of the value of the property of each guilty person as might guide the Council in fixing the fine to be imposed upon that person. The assumption in this Act is that the fines to be so inflicted upon resetters of the ClanGregor were like the escheated property of the culpable MacGregors themselves, to go to the Earl of Argyll; but from a subsequent minute of Council, of date 8th July 1613, we learn that the Earl then by his own voluntary offer agreed that 22½ per cent. of all the moneys due to him or that might be due to on the reset-account should go into his Majesty's Exchequer. His Majesty and the Earl having thus a joint pecuniary interest in the MacGregor-reset fund arrangements were necessary for so collecting the fines and banking them, and for so keeping the accounts that the two interests should not get confused, and his Majesty's Treasurer should be able to calculate exactly the worth of this item of his Majesty's revenue. These arrangements were made on the 22nd of July 1613 when by an Act of Council, Archibald Primrose, writer, and Archibald Campbell of Glencharra-dale were, with consent of the Earl of Argyle, appointed agents for uplifting the fines and for keeping just reckoning of his Majesty's interest in them on the one hand and the Earl's on the other."

"One might have expected, . . . , that in the course of the year 1614 it would have been possible to wind up the whole business of the fines for MacGregor-reset by settling accounts between his Majesty for his 22½ per cent. of the proceeds and the Earl of Argyle for his remaining 77½ per cent. But though there is evidence that by this time a good deal of money from the Macgregor Reset Fund had gone into the Earl of Argyle's pocket, and some of it into his Majesty's Scottish Treasury, there was no hurry in closing the accounts, and no possibility of hurry. For one thing, if it is easier even nowadays to impose a fine than to exact payment of it, one can see what hard work it must have been for Archibald Primrose and Archibald Campbell to 'uplift' the fines which the Council had imposed on so many Highland Lairds, Highland farmers, and Highland cottars, and at what expense of hornings, poindings, arrests, &c., &c., they must have succeeded in 'uplifting' even so much as they did. In the second place the crime of Macgregor reset had by no means been stamped out in 1614. Even as late as 1617, the year of King James's one and only visit to Scotland after his accession to the English throne, did not his Majesty signalise his continued detestation of the Macgregors by causing to be passed in the Scottish Parliament held on that occasion in his own presence an Act renewing and confirming all the preceding Acts of Parliament or of Council directed against the ClanGregor? Why close the accounts of the Macgregor Reset Fund in 1614, or in any subsequent year near that date when there was still a chance of an indefinite increase of the fund by further fines to be exacted either from former offenders for relapses into their old crime or from newly discovered offenders? But in the third place, the circumstances of the Earl of Argyle from 1614 onwards were such as to postpone, so far as he was concerned, the necessity for winding up the accounts between him and the King in the matter of the Macgregor Reset Moneys. In 1615 the Earl was fully occupied with the business of his Lieutenantcy for the suppression of the Macdonald Rebellion in the West; from that year to 1617 his thoughts ran mainly on the acquisition of the Lordship of Kintyre as the natural reward for that service and early in 1618 he had left Scotland and Britain altogether, to be the amazement soon both of Scotland and of England by his apostacy in Flanders from the Protestant religion and to be pursued by his Majesty on that account as a recreant and traitor."

Dr Masson proceeds to show that in July 1623 an Act was passed for the appointment of a Committee consisting of seven of the Councillors "for the audit of the accounts of the MacGregor Reset Fund as they should be tendered by Messrs Archibald Primrose and Archibald Campbell." The result was a Report and Audit, of date 31st March 1624, a copy of which is printed in Vol. xiv. of the published Register of the Privy Council with full lists of the persons fined. Dr Masson condenses the amounts levied in the following table (here slightly abridged).

I. Finings in the Inverness District, concluded
	30th July 1613	£36,010	0 0
II. Do.	in the Elgin and Forres District, concluded 1st Sept. 1613	35,736	13 4
III. Do.	in the Perth District, sundry times, concluded 31st March 1618	28,620	0 0
IV. Do.	in Strathearn, 27th March 1614	5,016	13 4
V. Do.	in Menteith, concluded 14th July 1613	5,310	0 0
VI. Do.	in Dumbartonshire, concluded 17th March 1614	4,374	13 4

But although this was the total amount of the imposed fines, Dr Masson goes on to explain that the amount actually collected fell far short of it, an authorised abatement reduced it to £77,271, 4s., a residue of £32,606, 1s. 10d. remained due at the date of making up the account, and the whole available assets appear to have been £44,665, 2s. 2d. The proportion due to the King is set down at £10,050.

Reading over the long list of "Resettlers," copied from the said "ClanGregor Fines Book," given by Dr Masson in Vol. xiv., one cannot but admire the number of disinterested friends who had thus afforded "Comfort" to the ClanGregor, at their own serious peril.

In the following Index an attempt has been made to group the names of individual MacGregors into families, extended memoirs of which may hereafter be given. To save space, reference to names of other persons or places is brief.
